Neat and Convenient New Bungalow

Contractor J. B. Shipp has just completed a new bungalow for Carey Egster. It has a built-in porch supported by pink-stone columns. The floor and steps are of cement.

The living room has a beamed ceiling and a regular bungalow fireplace made of gray and pink building stone. A continuous archway supported by wooden columns opens into a pretty dining room, while a door opens into the front bedroom.

The dining room has a large built-in buffet with art glass doors above and below the pass cupboard. The three bedrooms are each furnished with a series of built-in drawers and a large closet. The door opening into the closet from the front bedroom is set with an elegant plateglass mirror, extending almost the full length of the door.

Each room is finished in some prevailing color. This tone being suggested by the wall paper.

The Dutch kitchen is a model of convenience with its sink and drain board, its many built-in drawers, kettle closet, boiler room, sugar and flour bins, and dumb waiter leading to the cellar in the basement.

The laundry room opens off the kitchen and is fitted with two white enameled laundry trays. From this room the stairway leads to the basement where a large room with cement floor is fitted up for the cellar. The dumb waiter passes from this room to the kitchen above.

This modern and convenient bungalow was built at a cost of $3200.
