

The Brotherhood of American Yoeman

Organizer C. F. Bartlett of the Brotherhood of American Yoemen, is organizing a lodge in Prineville. This is one of the strongest fraternal orders in the United States. It is now in its 14th year with a membership of 150,000. It has a reserve fund of $1,360,614; total assets, $1,578,828. It is a fraternal and social organization and carries with it insurance benefits. It insures against accidents, total disability, old age and death. Both men and women between the age of 18 and 50 are eligible for membership and can participate in the insurance benefits. The insurance rates are based on a graduated scale according to age.

This society operates on the expectancy of life plan, which is the only plan of fraternal insurance that will never have to change the rates, thereby insuring the man or woman when they get old for the same rate that they paid when they were young.

The Homestead just organized at Redmond with a charter list of over 70 members is No. 3049, which goes to show that the order is a growing one at the present time. About an average of 60 Homesteads were organized a month during the year 1910. Fifty thousand applications were written by the order.

Here are six valid reasons why you should be a Yoeman:

Its plan is superior to others—that is excellence.

Its members are protected by over a million reserve—that's safety.

It will not accept sub-standard risks—that's independence.

Its 150,000 members pay their dues—that's business.

It has never refused to pay a just claim—that's proof.

It furnishes reliable protection at lowest cost—that's what you want.

Whether interested or not I would like to meet you and have a talk with you. I have a proposition that appeals to people in all walks of life; one that is gilt-edge and iron-clad. It is one that is hard to find for such a low rate of maintenance.

Fraternal yours,
C. F. BARTLETT,

District Deputy Organizer for Brotherhood of American Yoemen.

A NOVEL CONTEST

By EDWARD TOWNE.

Copyright, 1911, by American Press Association.

Captain Crofton of the scouter Henrich Boy, cruising in Bering sea, was in a quandary. Among his crew were Dick Turner, a southerner, and Oat Jacobson, a Swede. These two men's dispositions partook of the climates in which they had been reared, Turner being fiery, Jacobson's peaceful. Turner had taken a dislike to Jacobson and let no opportunity slip to injure or annoy him. Unfortunately for Jacobson, Turner was a strong man thirty years old, while the object of his dislike was a youth of eighteen. Turner could easily thrash Jacobson, and as for more serious weapons than fists, the southerner was sufficiently skilled either with the pistol or the foil to poke a hole in the northerner without any risk whatever to himself.

Captain Crofton knew about the trouble, and it caused him serious annoyance. No commander likes to have those under him fighting among themselves. It diverts their attention from their duties and interferes with their efficiency. The captain had remonstrated with Turner, directing him to let the boy alone. Turner declared that it was Jacobson who was making all the trouble.

One day when Turner and Jacobson were sitting opposite each other at the mess table Turner thrust his legs over on to Jacobson's side. Jacobson in a mild voice asked him to remove them. Turner kept his legs where they were, giving Jacobson a look as much as to say, "What are you going to do about it?" Jacobson raised his cowed head and brought his boot heel down on Turner's instep. Both rose from the table, but were not permitted by their messmates to come together. Turner sent one of the crew to Jacobson with a challenge to fight in any way he chose, Turner offering to submit to any handicap to equalize differences.

This fracas having been reported to the captain, he sent for Jacobson to come to his cabin.

"Do you wish to fight Turner?" asked the commander.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I will permit the affair to take place on one condition."

"What is that, sir?"

"I to name the weapons."

"Do you propose something harmless, like feather dusters?"

"Not at all, I shall name weapons to kill."

"Very well, sir. I will leave the terms to you."

"Send a message to Turner that you will fight him tomorrow morning at two bells and say that the weapons will be provided."

Jacobson left the captain without further inquiry as to the nature of the weapons with which he was to fight and sent his acceptance of Turner's challenge.

The news spread among the crew that there was to be a meeting between Turner and Jacobson the next morning with the captain's sanction. Great interest was manifested as to the kind of weapons to be used, but on this point there was no information forthcoming.

The next morning at two bells the combatants left the forecastle and went on deck. They found two sets of hose attached to the ship's pumps with an inch nozzle on each lying on the deck twenty paces apart.

"Cap'n's orders is," said the quartermaster, "them's the weapons—cold water for ammunition."

It may be supposed this meant that the affair was to be turned into a joke. The men who stood looking on knew that such was not the case. Not a man there but would rather have faced a sword or a pistol than ice water in a temperature of 20 degrees below zero.

Turner looked at the weapons and chuckled. Jacobson looked at them and took heart. He saw at once that the captain had given him a great advantage. A northerner, he was used to the cold and could at least stand such a bath better than his antagonist. He picked up his nozzle and stood ready for the fray. Turner took up his with evident reluctance. Then the word was given, the principals turned the spigot, and the battle was on.

Jacobson received the first impact of the water without any apparent shrinking. At home in Sweden he had been accustomed to go in the morning to a river flowing near his home, break the ice and take his dip. Turner, on the contrary, whined. He had been used to bathing when at home in water between 70 and 80 degrees. Nevertheless he was in for it and summoned all his resolution to endure the cold.

There were no rounds, as in a pugilistic contest. It was understood that each man was to stand up and receive his cold bath till he was either frozen or surrendered. Turner knew that if beaten he would be a cowed man; Jacobson understood that if he could put his enemy out of the fight he would conquer a peace. Both were good pluck. Turner's lips turned blue, and he was shivering; Jacobson drew in long breaths of oxygen and stood steady. In a few minutes Turner's nozzle dropped from his hand. He stooped to pick it up, but Jacobson poured a stream in his face, and he couldn't see it. Presently he got his hands on it, but the fingers were benumbed, and Jacobson soon knocked it again out of his grasp. He stood the stream for a moment, then turned his back to it and fled.

That was the end of his persecution of Jacobson.

Dr. Keeney was there. They said that the cartilage between the vertebra had given away, allowing one of the vertebra to drop down on another, pressing against the spinal cord from the inside. They said that medicine would do no good whatever, and they are having a brace of some kind made for him to wear. Mrs. Reams said they told her they could cure him but it would take some time. The Drs. said they could have this brace on him by next Sunday and then she could take him home."

Meteors.

There is one very interesting fact connected with meteors that have struck the earth. Hundreds of them have been examined and found to contain animal remains—that is, the very lowest forms of life. This indicates that they are parts of a world that burst into fragments long ago. What a thought—a world broken up and scattered through space! Maybe we had another moon once, but that broke into pieces and these are the pieces, and maybe they are parts of the planet that once revolved between Mars and Jupiter. Over 500 of the larger pieces of this planet have been discovered and catalogued. One of these flew away inside of Mars' orbit. Why may not many of the smaller pieces and these solid meteors be they? It is probably so.—Columbus Journal.

Dense.

One day the teacher asked her class to write an essay on London, about which they had just been reading. When examining their papers later she was surprised to read the following: "The people of London are noted for their stupidity." "Where did you get that from?" asked she of Maggie Jones. "Please, miss, it's all in the book. It says 'the population of London is very dense.'"—London Answers.
