Sumptuary Laws.

Sumptuary laws are laws, now generally obsolete, enacted in the supposed interest of public morals to restrain extravagance in private expenditure, especially in matters of food, dress and amusements. They abounded in ancient Greece and Rome and found great favor in the legislation of England from the time of Edward II. (1307-1327) to that of the reformation (1517). They existed in France as early as the time of Charlemagne (768-814) and continued to be enacted as late as the seventeenth century, but in neither country do they appear to have been enforced to any great extent. Sumptuary laws were repealed in England in 1856.

Longitude and Dinner Time.

About 11 o'clock one morning Aunt Dinah was peeling potatoes for dinner. "Now, I reckon that all ober dis big worl' eberybody what's got anything to git a meal with is a-gittin' ready for dinner," she placidly remarked.

"Oh, no, Aunt Dinah," said Miss Nina. "In New York it's just about dinner time now, and out by the Rocky mountains it won't be dinner time for three hours yet."

"Oh, my, Miss Nina! You plumb sure o' that?"

"Plumb sure, Aunt Dinah."

"Well, I's mighty glad I lives in a Christian land whar when it's 'leben o'clock it's 'leben o'clock, and we can't netber git mixed up on the dinner time."—Youth's Companion.

"The Bridge" Born of Sorrow.

"My poem entitled 'The Bridge,'" said Longfellow, "was written in sorrow, which made me feel for the loneliness of others. I was a widower at the time, and I used sometimes to go over the bridge to Boston evenings to meet friends and return near midnight by the same way. The way was silent, save here and there a belated footstep. The sea rose or fell among the wooden piers, and there was a great furnace on the Brighton hills whose red light was reflected by the waves. It was on such a late, solitary walk that the spirit of the poem came upon me. The bridge has been greatly altered, but the place of it is the same."

WHEN TO GO HOME.

"When tired out go home. When you want consolation go home. When you want to show yourself at your best go home and do the act there. When you feel like being extra liberal go home and practice on your wife and children first. When you want to shine with unusual brilliancy go home and light up the whole household."

The Justinian Code.

The Justinian code was, as the name implies, a compilation and rearrangement of existing laws rather than a body of new laws. Justinian's commission authorizing the work was given A. D. 528. To the code the emperor added the pandects, the institutes and the novels. These compilations were known as the Corpus Juris Civilis, or body of civil law. The Justinian code is still the basis of all French law, and many of its principles are even to this day operative in the state of Louisiana.—New York American.

Her Double Turn.

"Is there any foundation for the popular belief that the constituents of man's body are renewed once every seven years?" inquired the female medical student.

"I do not know how it is with a man," replied the grumpy-old college professor, who does not approve of having women attend his lectures, "but I have read of one certain female whose body underwent two complete physical changes in the course of a very few minutes."

"How and when did such a wonderful thing happen?"

"It was Lot's wife. You remember, she turned to rubber and then almost at once turned to salt."

The Beaver's Tooth.

No carpenter's chisel can do more effective work than is turned out with ease and neatness by the beaver's tooth. This is the principal tool with which these patient, clever builders construct their dams. The outer surface of the tooth is a scale of very hard enamel, while the body of it is of softer dentine. As the softer substance wears away in use the end of the tooth takes a chisel-like bevel, leaving a thin, slightly projecting edge of hard enamel as sharp as any carpenter's tool fresh from the oilstone. The thin scale of enamel gives keenness, the softer dentine supplies strength, and thus the combination forms a formidable tool, which actually sharpens itself by use.

Our First Cocoa.

The first newspaper notice that announced the sale of cocoa and chocolate in America read:

"Amos Trask, at his house, a little below the Bell tavern, in Danvers, makes and sells chocolate which he will warrant to be good and takes cocoa to grind. Those who may please to favor him with their custom may depend upon being well served and at a very cheap rate."

This notice appeared in the Essex Gazette of Massachusetts on the 18th of June, 1771, five years before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Despite Mr. Trask's assurance that his rate was cheap, chocolate was very expensive and beyond the purse of any but the wealthy folk.
