MANAGEMENT OF THE HEAD OF THE HERD

By the time the bull has reached the age of one year he should have been given a number of lessons in leading, writes F. M. Twining in the Farm If you have not taught him to Journal. follow you in going to and returning from the posture, begin now, using at first a head halter and gradually changing to the nose ring, above all things being gentle, patient and firm. Don't unnecessarily britate his sensi tive nose by violent jerks, as it quick ly tenches him to become cross. When he is unruly give him a smart rap with your land until he realizes that you are master.

From this time on he may be used for light service. Now comes the time when it is no longer safe to allow him to run loose in the pasture. Some develop the tendency to challenge all living and inanimate things in a much more violent degree than others, but none is to be trusted, and the farsee ing breeder who is striving for the best will conserve that masculine vigor that would go to break down his fences, destroy his cornfield and jeopardize the lives of all who traverse "green pastures" by providing spe cial quarters for his builship. It i It is impossible also to tell when the cows are due to calve if the bull is allowed to run with them-an item well worth every up to date business man's attention.

The proper place for the bull is certainly in a good sized box stall with a concrete or plank floor (if concrete two or three layers of tarred paper should be laid beneath the surface when constructing to keep out the cold) covered with enough clean bedding to insure comfort. It should be well lighted and well ventilated with out the light coming in through a leaky roof and the fresh air in a draft through a crack in the wall. He should be tied to a post with his left side toward the door by which you enter. A good stout chain or cotton rope (a hemp rope will irritate his neck) should be fastened around his neck and attached to the post, with a lighter chain fastened to his nose ring a little more slack than the first.

The bull must be fed liberally, enough to keep him in a good, thrifty condition without being fat. The grain should be of a light, nutritious nature, the amount varying with the individual and with the work he has to do. Give him plenty of bright clover or alfalfa hay and also plenty of pure, clean water.

Late Fattener For Hogs. Nothing for fattening hogs in the fall is preferable to field corn. In the northwestern part of the state, says the Minnesota experiment station, the flint or other early ripening varieties should be planted for this purpose. In southern Minnesota the regular field varieties may be used successstation has Newton's Apple Tree.

The story that it was at Woolsthorpe, while sitting under an apple tree in the summer of 1666, that Newton saw the apple fall that suggested to him the theory of unieversal gravity has never been di-rectly disproved. Voltaire is the authority for the story. He got it from Newton's favorite niece, Catherine Bartow, who married a mem-ber of the Royal society, one of Newton's most intimate friends. Newton's most infinite friends. The story may or may not be false, but it is certain that tradition mark-ed a tree as being the one from which the apple fell till so late as 1820, when, owing to its decay, the 1820, when wing to its decay, the tree was cut down and its wood carefully preserved.

The Human and Animal Brain.

It is safe to say that, in the most important sense of all, there is but little basis for comparison between the brain of man and that of the highest animal below him. The smartest "educated chimpanzee" is but a feeble reflection of intellectual man, just enough of a resemblance to him to make us laugh. Not only in volume, but in the fineness of the convolution, the human brain is immeasurably superior to that of the lower creatures, and between the finest products of what we are pleased to call the animal "instinct" and the creations of the mind of man there is a distance that is inconceivably vast .- New York American.

Treatment For Cracked Heels.

For cracked heels in horses clip off the hair, cleanse parts and poultice with warm flaxseed meal for a week. Smear some vaseline on the surface of poultice to keep it from sticking. After discontinuing the poultices wash the parts again and dry them thor oughly; then apply twice daily an ointment composed of two parts flowers of sulphur, one part ichthyol and one part calomel to eight parts lard or Innolin.

Dairy Wisdom

It is not always the cow that gives the largest amount of milk that is making the most money for you. Test her and be certain.

The care given the helfer calves during their first year has much to do with their fu-ture usefulness. Keep them sleek and growing and give enough clover or alfalfa hay to develop a capacity for handling food.

Fresh air has an actual money value to the dairy farmer. Without fresh air the cow cannot digest as much food, and without plenty of food she can not make so much nor as good milk.

Save enough straw to give your cows good, comfortable beds during the winter. Selling straw is "saving at the spigot and leaking at the bung-
