Demonstration Train Good Thing

change conditions or there will be still greater financial troubles among them than at present. And it seems evident that they are now taking hold of the matter with a firm desire to profit by those sent to teach them, the best teachers in the Northwest, the staff of the Oregon Agricultural College.

These teachers are not merely theorists. Every man of them has kept close to the soil, has learned the practical as well as the theoretical side of the business he is trying to better by his teachings. And the settlers know this, therefore have faith in them. At least their conduct on this entire trip showed that.

Take the last meeting at Madras, which was merely typical of the others. It differed only in point of numbers from the others because the train was a mile or more from the town, up a steep hill, and very few townspeople and scarcely any children came out. Hence the meeting was almost entirely made up of farmers, tillers of the soil. And their eagerness for the new gospel of rotation and cultivation, selection and diversification was almost pathetic, even tragic. Think of 100 farmers sitting for three hours listening, questioning and telling their troubles to those spreading the priceless ideas for their future success. And when the train pulled out many of them still stood there watching the lecturers and exhibits with hungry eyes.

There is one thing certain; if the trip does not result in much good then there is no longer any faith to be placed in human nature, for hundreds and hundreds who listened to the teachers averred that they would try and follow their instructions. And they will. They are intelligent men, honest and industrious men—and they have spread to their homes with a grim determination, a set purpose, to do better farming in the future than they have in the past.

So much for the elders; how about the children? There is not a particle of doubt that the young people who listened to the lectures will be a mighty force for good. It will take years for this good to all come out, but it is as sure as the sun shines and water runs that many of the youths who heard the stories from the college experts will have their whole lives sweetened by the teachings.

One of the touching incidents of the trip occurred at Culver. There is a district school some eight miles east of that town called the Red Rock School. There are 24 scholars in the district and every one of them came over to listen and learn. Their teacher, Miss Olive Mortimer, a Portland woman, had them in charge. They were on a large farm wagon, gaily decorated, with four stout horses as the motive power. As they came near the train they halted and gave the following yell with a spirit and vim indescribable:

Red Rock, Red Rock, who are we?
Future pupils of the O. A. C.

They had a fine lunch with them and had a regular picnic on the platform of one of the Culver warehouses. In talking with Miss Mortimer later she said that she believed the desire to become a pupil of the college would never die out of those young minds, and that many of them would live up to their yell.

Taking a narrow view of the trip, it is sure that the railway people have made many friends and patrons by it. The communities visited are beyond doubt very grateful for the visits paid them. In Mr. Miller's talks he showed how impossible it was for his company to prosper unless the people were successful, explaining that to all intents and purposes the railway and the people of the communities through which it passes are partners—and both must go up or down together. The farmers seem to feel that that view is true, and they are very grateful for what the company has done to show them the light and their feeling for the Oregon Agricultural College, or rather their love, will likewise be accentuated and strengthened.

Russell Visiting In the Valley

Lebanon Critterton.
G. H. Russell, of Tacoma and Prineville, was visiting his brother-in-law, A. C. Brown, the latter part of last week, returning east of the mountains the first of the week. Mr. Russell has been buying and selling horses for a number of years and in eastern Oregon people always came to town with their horses when they heard that Russell was there. He has recently bought the C. Sam Smith stock farm and cattle, near Prineville, for $55,000, which with the road land recently purchased, gives him over 12,000 acres, nearly 1000 of which is alfalfa land under irrigation. This is one of the finest stock ranches in the west and is well stocked with thoroughbred Hereford cattle. As showing the rise in real estate in the vicinity of Prineville since the railroad has been assured, eight years ago Mr. Russell was offered this fine farm for $24,000 and refused to pay it, thinking it an extravagant price, yet he paid more than double that amount and thinks he got splendid value for the money.
