62ND SESSION OF CONGRESS CONVENES

Regular Session Opened Monday With Prospects of Protracted Meeting.

Washington.—The first regular session of the Sixty-second Congress opened Monday. Having perfected its organization when it met in extraordinary session last spring, Congress was ready to begin work.

Democrats, Republican Insurgents and Republican Standpatters all admit that the session, on the eve of the presidential campaign, will be bitter and protracted.

There are few who think that the session will end before next June. A great game of politics, with each side sparring for advantage, is to be played, and nothing except the near approach of the national conventions and the necessity for "fence building" will cause the legislators to cease their labors at the national capitol.

President Upholds Sherman Law.
President Taft in his message stated that, owing to the number of important subjects calling for comment, it was impossible to include a discussion of them in one message of reasonable length and, therefore, he would transmit a series of messages between the opening of Congress and the adjournment for the Christmas holidays.

His first message dealt with anti-trust legislation. The President stated that he was strongly opposed to the repeal or amendment of the Sherman law, and suggested that the law should be strengthened by supplemental legislation. He urged the enactment of some sort of federal incorporation act and the creation of a federal corporation commission.

Must Do Over Extra Session Work.
Much of the work of the extra session which President Taft called in order to pass the Canadian reciprocity agreement, must be done over again. The President vetoed the tariff revision bills passed by the Democrats and the Republican Insurgents, and both factions are armed for the fray once more.

The Democrats have a good working majority in the House, and the important bills on their program will be passed quickly.

Tariff and constructive corporation legislation are the two items of general interest standing out from the rest in the line of serious business.

As soon as President Taft sends in his tariff message, following the report made to him by the tariff board, the Democrats of the ways and means committee will shape their program. It is practically assured that whatever the ways and means committee puts forward, whether wholly in rapport with the tariff board findings or not, will pass the House.

Many Tariff Bills Coming.

The probability is that there will be a series of measures revising various schedules in conformity with the plan followed last summer. The real tariff fight will follow in the Senate with the result uncertain now and with the impending complications wearying to contemplate in view of the balance of power held by the Insurgents and the lack of harmony in the ranks of the Senate Democrats.

The corporation legislative problem is even more vexing than that pertaining to the tariff. The President and his friends are hopeful that non-partisan public sentiment will force the parties to co-operate and place a federal corporation law on the statute books.

Panama Canal Legislation.

The coming session is expected to develop the first legislation for the operation, maintenance and government of the Panama canal and the canal zone. Everything that Congress has done in the past regarding the great artificial waterway has been directed toward construction. The question of tolls for use of the canal and its permanent fortification are two of the big subjects that it is expected will be embodied in legislation introduced during the session. It is not believed, however, that much legislation will be passed on the future of the canal, it being attempted largely as a formative precaution to test the sentiment toward the different plans suggested.

Will Do Little Before Holidays.

But little constructive legislation is expected before the Christmas holidays. After the reading of the President's annual message both houses settled down to the introduction of bills and preliminary skirmishing in advance of the real battle that will begin after the Christmas recess. The House Democrats will then plunge at once into the consideration of the tariff revision bills and the annual appropriation measures. The report of the tariff board on the whole schedule will be submitted shortly after Congress convenes.
