Land Board Will Protect Settlers

Salem, Or.—It will be necessary for J. E. Morson, president of the Deschutes Land Company, with whom the desert land board has been having much trouble in arranging details for the protection of settlers in connection with the company's Carey Act project, to come to time and make satisfactory agreements with the desert land board before the company will be given an easement for Crescent lake reservoir, a necessary part of the project.

This point is made definite and emphatic by a letter received by the secretary of the land board from Fred Dennett, commissioner of the general land office. Mr. Dennett states that right of way for the reservoir site will not be granted until investigation of the operations, begun as a result of information furnished by the governor, is completed. He intimates that the general land office expects the company to enter into a new and more binding contract with the desert land board.

"If the application is approved the company can stand on its legal rights and the desert land board will have no means of controlling the company, except as assured under the contract," says Mr. Dennett. "It appears that the state board has had considerable difficulty not only with this company, but also with other companies relative to their various contracts. Accordingly the company's application will remain suspended, pending the completion of the investigation and the adjustment of all difficulties between the board and the company."

How Farmers Can Destroy Pests

The purpose of this article is to supply the popular demand for information relative to the most effective means of controlling certain crop pests in this district.

RABBITS seem especially troublesome in young alfalfa and it is possible to protect small plots in the less settled communities by chicken fencing. Poisoning is a very effective way to combat these rascals, placing the poison in rabbit runs and at field corners on shingles. A teaspoonful of salt is placed on a shingle and powdered strychnine sprinkled over it using a quantity equal to half the size of a pea, slightly moistening and then sprinkling a trifle more salt over this.

SAGE RATS have given considerable trouble and where not too numerous these like the rats may be shot. Early in the season they will eat grain poisoned with strychnine. The most effective treatment that we have found at this time of year is carbon bisulfide. Pour about a teaspoon of this poisonous liquid on some absorbent, as a piece of dry horse dung, roll down the burrow and plug up the holes. The liquid evaporates rapidly and the gas being heavier than air settles downward, suffocating all animal life confined.

Caution—This gas will explode and all flames or pipes must be kept away.

RED ANTS are very destructive and have been seen to destroy as much as one acre in twenty of grain. Early and frequent discing exposes and kills these and they are very sensitive to odors, so burying the absorbent saturated with carbon bisulfide in ant hills is very effective in destroying the ants. Pouring about a tablespoon of kerosene in each hill is another effective and cheap method of destroying ants. They may also be trapped by burying bottles in the mounds so the top is flush with the surface.

WIRE WORMS are hard, smooth, cylindrical, reddish brown larvae about 1 to 1 1/2 inches long. They eat the smaller stalks and roots of young grain and puncture the larger ones. Late fall plowing and rotation of crops allowing hogs to pasture on the meadows before breaking up, and avoiding the growing of crops subject to injury the second year from sod, and late spring seeding, are about the only things that can be done to lessen injury.

CUT WORMS. These caterpillars are smooth, soft bodied, whitish to grey or brown in color and variously marked with stripes or blotches. They destroy young grain by eating the leaves and gnawing off the stalks near the ground at night. Pasture off with hogs and early fall plow before the insects have laid their eggs in the rubbish. Seed late in spring where possible for the worms go down into the subsoil to pupate late in spring. Mixing one pound paris green to thirty pounds bran and scattering along edges of field with a drill, or about such plants as cabbage by hand, will be very helpful in lessening injury.
