Settlers Want Their Patents

Salem, Or .- Assured by Jesse Stearns, secretary of the Central Oregon Irrigation company, that project hinges on the company's the company had bright prospects of securing over $200,000 it now has in prospect, and the for immediate expenditure on the company's project in Crook that nothing should be done that county, the state desert land might interfere with those prosboard today refused to take any pects. action that might harass the securing of funds for the completion of the project.

tiers in the Powell Butte district. urged the board for the second time to take action that would compel the company to enlarge what is known as the Central Oregon canal, so there would be no further delay in getting water to all the purchasers of land in Powell Butte district. It is estimated the cost of enlarging the canal would be $25,000, but it was said it would cripple the company if compelled at this time to expend this amount on that particular work when every effort is being made to complete the north canal and other important parts of the project.

"It is very easy to call upon the board to compel the company to do certain things, but it is not so easy for the board to do it or for the company to act when it does not have the money," said Secretary Stearns. "Last year the company spent $180,000, of which $140 000 was new cash brought into the project. we have just secured a pledge from these same people to put up $60,-000 more, and we have very good assurance of getting $150,000 from other sources.

"But I want to remind Mr. Williams and members of the board that if drastic steps are taken against the company now. it would mean the work would stop and you would have another project on your hands to take to the next legislature the same as you did the Columbia Southern.

"We expect to have money available for continuing the work on the North canal within ,60 days, but to enlarge the Powell Butte canal now would be foolish. There has been no graft in connection with this project, and no one has got out the money he invested."

Mr. Williams said the board aggravated the situation by approving, under a contract made February 5, 1912, the sale of more land in the area in which there already existed a caual shortage. He censured the board for transferring to the company $25,000 in cash out of the fund set aside to guarantee full performance of the conditions of the contract of June 17, 1907, and substituting a bond for $25,000 in its stead. Later, however, he admitted that the bond was just as binding and asked the board to begin action under the bond to compel the company to enlarge the Central Oregon or Powell Butte canal. This the board refused to do. "Should the board, at this time, see fit further to jeopardize the title to $500,000 worth of land in order to relieve the irrigation company from the expenditure of the sum of $25,000, which is necessary to enlarge the Central Oregon canal, it will certainly be remiss and be negligent in its obligations to the settlers and the state of Oregon," declared Williams. "It would be a glaring breach of faith, as settlers who purchase land in the segregations do so relying upon the desert land board to enforce the performance of the contracts between it and the company, which provide for the reclamation of the land." Williams said he thought the company should enlarge the Central Oregon canal so the setilers in the Powell Buttes could get patent to their land even if it meant the cessation of all the
