NATURAL NEST BEST FOR TURKEYS.

When Mother Turkey goes trilling round in the spring peeping here and peering there, and the boys come running in and shout, "Mother, the old turkey's huntin' a nest!" Now, don't you do as some of our grand and great grandmothers did. They discounted the natural, wild turkey instinct of Mother Turkey, thought to improve on nature and made her nest in a barrel, or box, and though their nature fake nesting,

A NATURAL TURKEY NEST. breeding and feeding were done with best intentions, these finally placed our country in the turkey graveyard class.

Now, look at our pictures. In the first Mother Turkey had her choice. She hunted and twittered around a long time before she found a place to suit her—a big, leafy brush heap in the woods. She knew that minks and weasels and skunks would be nosing around, and the sharp eyed hawk and crow and the fery eyed, velvet feathered owl would be after her and her speckled eggs, and she didn't want humans around to bungle the job either, and not till she hatched was her nest found and the brush, torn away, revealed her leafy retreat.

That's grand, true, natural nesting, that is! She sat there in perfect comfort for four weeks, dreaming of the pretty bird babies to come. The oak leaves and forest mold afforded a per-

THE OLD OAKEN BARREL. feely clean nest, the natural moisture from the ground kept her eggs from drying out and the thick, leafy canopy overhead gave perfect protection from sun and rain.

No wonder poult hatched in such lovely environment are the best, but look at the barrel. How would you like to sit in a barrel on a hot scorching day? Think of Mother Turkey sitting in there for a whole month. Do you suppose eggs hatch such good poults in a dry, dusty barrel as they do in nature's way? Can Mother Turkey change her position when she gets tired and turn and cool her eggs in such an uncomfortable place without breaking her eggs? And the bugs. Don't such barrels get lighthouse quick, especially when used for several hatches in succession as they often are?

Yes, everybody must 'fess that it's best for Mother Turkey to choose her own nest. All a human need do is to free her from lice before she nests and keep some feed handy to her retreat and water if there is not a chattering brook purring by.
