

With Aeroplane and Submarine Simultaneously.

RAPHIC incidents of the Euro- | pean war-some humorous, others intensely tragic-are reaching this side despite the strict censorship and some of the latest and best are given here:

A thrilling story of how a French cruiser engaged with an aeroplane and submarine simultaneously is told by a midshipman, who says that the French armored cruiser Waldeck-Rousseau was heading for Cattaro in the small hours of the morning and was warned that three submarines had stolen out to get her. Day had scarcely broken when also an Austrian biplane came sailing through the air straight toward the cruiser, hovering at not more than 1,500 feet above the ship.

Unmoved apparently by the hall of shot by quick firers, the biplane let fall a bomb which splashed into the sea about thirty feet to the starboard. abaft the bridge. A second bomb just missed the port quarter. At the same moment the lookout signaled submarine 800 yards to starboard. The submarine discharged a torpedo almost as soon as she was sighted, but the ship had time to shift her helm, and the deadly shaft went swirling by not more than three feet from the stern.

Before it could make a second shot the cruiser had blown away its periscope and another broadside must have sunk her, for she was never seen again. Another submarine came sneaking up on the other side. A destroyer endeavored to draw the cruiser's fire while the submarine crept in.

The Waldeck-Rousseau was easily a match for the two, and shortly after the destroyer turned and ran for the harbor with a nusty list to port, while the submarine dived to escape the storm of shell and did not show itself again.

"As if by Lightning!"

The awfuluness of modern artillery fire is described in a thrilling story told by a British officer just returned from Flanders. He says:

"I took eight men to find out what happened to Captain B. and a platoon who were sent to support the firing line. Three hundred yards out I saw the line of our infantry lying flat on the ground and made toward them. I shall never forget traversing those 300 yards. The Germans' guns, which were only S00 yards away, fired with extreme accuracy. It seemed impossible my little party could escape. Three were almost immediately hit, but we others kept on and reached the line.

"To my horror I found all dead or wounded, except three men, who were keeping perfectly still. I found a subaltern on his knee with one hand resting on the ground just in the attitude of a runner who is waiting the signal for the start of a race. He was stone dead. A shrapuel bullet had pierced his head. The man next to him, badly wounded in the thigh, told me the entire line was struck down as if by lightning. He said the subaltern remarked after being hit: 'Go on, please; I can't move. I must be wounded.' In the center a bunch of twenty five men lay in a the entire battery. At this moment Corporal Heinemann sprang forward, picked up the 125 pound shell and carried it from the battery into the firing line, fully aware of the fact that in doing so he exposed himself to the fire of his own lines.

"Had the shell exploded during those seconds it would have torn him to fragments. However, luck was with him. Seventy feet from the battery he dropped it and hurriedly fied, but before he had covered fifteen feet the shell burst with a deafening roar, spitting its deadly hall of iron in all directions. A miracle saved the life of Hans Heinemann. Only a splinter hit his heel.

"Seven hours inter Liege fell. Regardless of the wound, he took part in the storming and for three hours took part in the street fighting. Then he collapsed. A French surgeon nearby dressed his wound. Belgium papers reported his deed."

How the British Take It.

"I was in a club in London the other night," writes a European correspondent "A game of bridge was in progress. While one of the hands was being played the secretary entered the room and spoke to one of the governors, who was watching the play. They retired to a distant corner and whispered together for a moment or so. Then the governor turned to the table and stood waiting for the finish of the hand.

"Suddenly, as if by magic, conversation stopped. By some subtle telepathic process every one knew that something dread was in the air. The silence was ominous, portentous. There was no movement save that of the players, who continued the game without a word until the last trick had fallen. Then one of the players turned to the governor and asked;

"'News for me?"

"'Yes, colonel.' replied the governor. "'About my sons?

- "'Yes, colonel.' "Wounded?"
- "'Killed.'
- "'Which one?"
- "'Both, colonel." "The colonel reached across the table, poured out a drink and drank it. Then he addressed one of the onlook.

"'Finish the rubber for me, please,' he said, and then, turning to his fellow players, he continued: 'Gentlemen, you must excuse me. I have to go and break the news to their mother.' "

Battle In Air Described.

A graphic description of the hazardous daily life of army aviators, particularly of two Germans who have gained iron crosses of both the first and second class, but who will not discuss specific achievements, has been written by Heinrich Binder, one of the best known German war correspondents, who came across the air men at Antwerp. This is Binder's account of the aviators' work, which was for artillery reconnoissance:

"At an average beight of about 8,000 feet our aviators circle in huge ellipses

Between Volleys.

"Latest" from the trenches: A hare, startied by rifle fire, bounds wildly along the space between the French and German trenches. Instantly every rifle aims at the animal, which is shot.

Impulsively a Frenchman jumps out and hastens to selze the game, having visions of a tasty evening meal. That does not suit the Germans, who, momentarily suspending their rifle fire. shout: "Tobacco! Tobacco!"

The Frenchmen comprehend at once that the Germans will allow them to appropriate the hare if they leave the tobacco in exchange.

Whereupon the Frenchmen collect cigarettes and tobacco. One goes out, lifts the hare and leaves in its place a respectable packet of tobacco for the Germans. Could anything be more chivalrous or sportsmanlike?

Ran With Blazing Shell.

The story of the heroism of a German corporal, who for his valor received the iron cross, is told in a recent issue of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt. It follows:

'I have had a talk with Corporal Hans Heinemann of the field artillery," writes the correspondent. "He received the iron cross during the storming of Liege. One-fifth of his battery had already been slain before it had advanced three miles and taken up its position in the trenches. All around the country the air reverberated from the thunder of the guns. The heavy artillery of the forts of Liege were hurling shells weighing hundreds of pounds.

"Suddenly in the heat of the battle one of these glant shells dropped right into the German battery. The sand was thrown up in all directions and the shell lay in the open hollow. Although it had failed to explode, the danger of its so doing at any moment was imminent, with annihilation to between our batteries and the hostile position. The reroplane vibrates. The motor rattles and roars and hums. This music soothes the nerves of the aviators. It is so loud in the quiet in the upper air that it drowns the thunder even the heaviest artillery. With their field glasses the fliers observe the hostile position and note the effect of our artillery. Signals are given, 'Fell to the right,' 'Fell to the left,' 'Fell short' and 'Overshot mark.' but these signals are a secret.

"The French follow their well known tactics of changing their battery positions continually. But the aviators return again and again, dashing along at over sixty mlles an hour, and report the new positions. It is murderous fighting. As a hawk circling around a chick before seizing it, so the aviator high in the air circles around the artillery positions of the enemy, heralding death and destruction. When he approaches the hostile position batteries spray their shrapnel upon him, and the infantry concentrates its fire upon his aeroplane. The aviator goes higher and higher till he can no longer see a man, and the trenches appear as mere scratches on the ground. But those of the French are more distinctly visible.

"The motor continues its roar and clatter. Suddenly a little French aeroplane emerges from a cloud. It is smaller and lighter than our kind, of the type known as the 'peasants' ter-It makes an average speed of ror.' seventy-five miles an hour, and it is armed. Now there is a chase, as of one bird by another. They try to approach and then to elude each other. Neither side hears the shots fired by the other. The aviator can scarcely feel when a bullet strikes his own machine.

"The two aerial combatants soar higher till one or the other disappears in a protecting cloud that closes white and moist around him. If the danger becomes too threatening a gliding landing brings the aviators within their own lines. They must take care, however, not to get into the line of fire of their own army, for some of the big mortars throw their shells a mile or more into the air."
