

OPEN HOUSE AT SCHOOL

Miss Emily Shreder of the sixth grade instructs the boys of her room and the seventh grade in manual training. They had some excellent work on display. In this room, maps of the United States, South America and Oregon, which were drawn entirely from memory, were shown. They were first class in design and execution.

In the seventh grade, Miss May Hewes teaching, the girls of that room and the sixth are given sewing, and many useful and beautiful articles that they had made were tastily arranged for the display. Handkerchiefs, slippers, handbags, tea towels and other articles were included in the lot. In this room the pupils have been taught to take the primary colors and blend them for their tints in painting, and the results show real taste. The eighth grade class had the smallest display this grade and some of the others working here together during that period. While the designs were net of the lot, because of the fact that Professor Poole has been busy graduating a good class for high school next year. Their best work was shown in booklets displayed in manuscript, including appropriate covers prepared by the student, the topics treated being historical and classic. In conclusion it should be stated that the spirit of the teachers in assembling this kind of a display for the inspection of the public is one for which they should receive the highest praise.
