The county rock crusher is now working full blast on the river road east of the Dodson ranch. The machine is installed at the foot of a slide where the rocks pass into the crusher through a chute, and ground to bits as fast as served. An electric motor of 20-horsepower is used for operating and is sufficient to crush a rock nine by 18 inches. The rock is then carried to the loading hopper by an elevator and dumped into a sieve which distributes the particles according to size. The larger stones are used as a foundation of the road bed, then come those of medium size with the powdered rock as a final application.
