Oregon's Dry Record
Continued from page 1.

A general summary of the articles printed in the Portland papers which agreed as to facts, follows:

Drunkenness reduced 75 per cent.
Total arrests cut in half
Court income increased.
Vagrancy reduced 60 per cent.
Take a look at the comparative tabulation of arrests for drunkenness during the first six months of this year and last:

	1916	1915
June	136	536
May	144	541
April	181	575
March	163	517
February	115	544
January	91	518

Total for six months 830 3231
Reduction in arrests 2401.

The fact that the town has been so remarkably orderly under the dry regime has not at all affected a reduction in the income of the courts. So far as that phase of the question is concerned the figures tell the best tale:

Court receipts—
January to July, 1916 $17,301
January to July, 1915 15,479

Gain $ 1,822

Most of this amount is taken in from fines, and of the entire sum the greater percentage is assessed from speeders and violators of traffic ordinances. This type of cases continues, although the popularity of the accident-courting joy ride has waned.

Taking June as a representative month, the police records show that arrests for drunkenness dropped from 586 to 136, with the number of attending vagrancy arrests shrinking sympathetically from 94, counted as amazingly small number last year, to 36. The average number of vagrancy arrests last year was in the neighborhood of 300 each month.

Little difficulty is being experienced by the police so far as shipped in liquor is concerned. The advance of the summer months and impending hot weather naturally caused the number of shipments to increase somewhat, but the attending number of arrests has not increased. In fact, June figures showed a decrease of eight in the list of arrests.

Greatest trouble has been found in the practice of drinking alcohol, but "hard-heartedness" on the part of the court cut this evil to the minimum. Bootlegging, too, has been found an unprofitable business, and the wise and vigilant business man of the slums has turned from it.—Evening Telegram.
