News of the Films

"The Coward" Big Film Play.

Occasionally there comes a play which appeals to all classes. Such say many who have seen it, is Thomas H. Ince's civil war play, "THE COWARD," starring Frank Keenan, to be shown next Saturday and Sunday at the Lyric Theatre. The scenes of "The Coward" are laid in the Valley of Virginia in 1861. The story is that of a prideful father and a weak timid son, who, though a coward at the beginning of war between the North and the South, later redeems himself for the sake of the Confederacy in a startling manner. The battle scenes are magnificent. The far-flung line of soldiers is thrown over mountain and valley. Clouds from exploding shells half cover, half disclose the landscape. The furious onrush of foot soldiers and cavalry is exhibited. But the most startling scene of all is the fall with his horse of the young actor from a bridge into the river. This feat will cause many to gasp with astonishment.

Roscoe Arbuckle, in a Keystone comedy, Fickle Fatty's Fall, completes the two hour entertainment. The 11th chapter of the Iron Claw, "The Saving of Dan O'Mara," on Monday and Tuesday still maintains the interest in that popular serial at fever height.
