1916 HAS RECORD.

But three days remain of the year, 1916, and for the second time in the past half dozen years no murder has been committed in Crook and immediately adjoining counties, during the year.

Also, for the first time in the history of the Union, Oregon has been dry, for the year just closing. Strange coincidence.

We have reports from almost every county in the state that there is less crime of all kinds. There can be no doubt that there has been far less in this county.

The late G. W. Barnes once said that he had defended nineteen men for murder, and that in all those cases but one the deed was directly traceable to the excessive use of liquor.

Surely Oregon's record has been a good one, and it is sure to have its influence in the consideration of the national measure that is now before the law makers for their consideration.

During the senate debate on the prohibition bill for the District of Columbia recently, Senator Lane said:

"From the merchants of Portland, I have the information that since the state went dry there is more legitimate business and less trouble in collecting bills. Men who spent money for booze are now buying more shoes and more food and clothing for the wives and children at home."

THE PORTLAND HOG

In the days of the organization of the state, the "Salem Hog" was commonly spoken of. The term had its origin in the fact that that city had grabbed the buildings, and all the state institutions and that practically every Marion county legislator refused to vote for any progressive legislation where money was to be expended unless it was to be put into circulation in Marion county.

This condition lurks yet about the shadows of the statehouse and residents of the capital city look upon the grounds and buildings which you and I contribute to maintain with a proprietary interest that is quite amusing.

But poor old Salem is a real "piker." The village of Portland, on the banks of the Willamette, a few miles north of Salem, has grabbed and evidently copyrighted all the characteristics of the old Salem porker and added thereto a number of more modern ideas of which Marion county residents never dreamed.

As a result, residents of the country tributary to Portland are confronted with the proposition of helping themselves whenever a move is deemed necessary for advancement of any kind, and at the same time the "cow counties," as the Portland Press is pleased to term the interior of Oregon, are compelled to support Portland houses in a business way for up to this date shipments of stock to market and of goods from a central point have been limited almost entirely to Portland.

This is not a mere fancy; it is an ugly fact. Just now the people of Prineville and the country immediately tributary are building for themselves a railroad to connect this point with a main line.

Prineville has received no support in a material way from Portland interests in this enterprise, regardless of the fact that more cattle and better cattle are shipped into North Portland each year from this section than perhaps any other point in the state, and that the shipments of goods from that city for years has been heavy, and all of these shipments have been promptly paid for on a basis that has been very profitable to Portland dealers.

The matter of the sale of the $100,000 bond issue for this road has been investigated by buyers from all the surrounding states but not one Portland house has expressed a willingness to step forward and take any or all of them.

When these bonds are sold to-night, we venture to say the successful bidder will be from outside of Portland. It is a safe guess.

One Portland house which has recently bought two or three like issues from California and Washington, when approached said that they were not interested in Prineville's bonds.

The people are not blind to this indifference and the time is not far distant when a choice of California and Eastern markets will be open to them as well as Portland. When that time comes it will be necessary for the business people of the Rose City to bid for the business in this part of the state in an open market and unless there is a radical change in spirit they will receive but a small share of the increased business from one of the best stock countries in the west.

At present the Fat Stock Show, Irrigation Congress, teachers' association meetings and any number of conventions are timed for the season in Portland when the hotel business is dull, the tourist season being off, and we are all urged to attend these meetings for the good it will do—Portland.

There is a real opportunity for the metropolis of this state, and if it is overlooked the result will not be the best for that city. Cooperation, to be successful, cannot be one-sided, and if it is, the "other side" will presently refuse to cooperate.
