N. PORTLAND SHOW FOR ALL LIVESTOCK

Directors have been elected and plans perfected for the Pacific International which will open at North Portland a week from Monday for the biggest week that the north-western livestock people have ever seen.

The Portland show is on a three city circuit which will give Oregon the best show of the three.

The plan embodies a livestock circuit consisting of Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland. By this means the first show would be held in the Southern California city. The best of the stock exhibited there would be sent to San Francisco to compete with the numerous other entries and then the winners at the Golden Gate city would come on to Portland for the third and final exhibit the latter part of November of each year. In addition to the cream of the stock shown in the California cities, there would also be the various kinds and breeds of livestock from this and neighboring states and the show would be unsurpassed anywhere.

As a matter of fact, if present plans carry, as they undoubtedly will, the Pacific International will embrace a bigger list of exhibits than even the famous International of Chicago which now ranks as the leader.

To Erect New Buildings

The show will be held in a magnificent new building, or set of buildings, to be erected south of the present administration building of the Portland Union Stockyards. There will be the main show building some 300x200 feet with a balcony extending all around and capable of seating 700 persons. Stalls for horses will line the inner walls and in the center will be a ring for show purposes, especially for the horses which will be made a feature of the exposition.

Behind the main building will be at least three barns, where the cattle, hogs and sheep will be exhibited. These barns will each be of immense size, but if too small to house the stock, a second floor will be put in, making them double-deckers.

This is the plan as worked out by L. R. McGee, treasurer of the Pacific International, William H. Daughtrey, president, and other livestock men interested. It is hoped to complete arrangements in time for the 1918 show.

This Year's Show Peer of All Relative to this year's show, which will be held November 19 to 23, Mr. McGee states it will unquestionably be the peer of all its predecessors, and that will be going some. Horses will not make up as much of the exhibit as had been hoped for, because of the necessity of having to show under tents this year, but there will be at least three different breeds of stallions, and in addition the Portland Hunt Club will stage a horse show evenings.

One feature this year will be housing of all livestock under one immense tent, so that visitors to the show may pass from one exhibit to another without the necessity of stepping outside.

Messrs. Daughtrey and McGee are working diligently to make the show the success hoped for, and are receiving the hearty support of lovers of livestock of all kinds.
