AMERICAN TRANSPORT SUNK BY SUBMARINE

Partly Trained Boys Display Great Conrage in Face of Danger.

An Irish Port—A mass of swirling wreckage on the calm neck of the sea along the Irish coast marks the grave of the Tuscania, the first American troop ship sunk by a German submarine. The survivors are agreed that no one saw the wake of foam as the torpedo came toward the vessel.
The torpedo struck the Tuscania a vital blow amidship, in the boiler-room, and there was a muffled crash, which told everyone what had happened. Practically all accounts agree that two torpedoes were fired at the Tuscania, one passing close under her stern. The transport floated for several hours after she was torpedoed. The fact that the Tuscania remained afloat for a considerable period after the attack is believed to account for the large number of lives saved.

A medical officer from the Tuscania declared most of the deaths occurred among the men who jumped overboard when she was first struck.
American officers among the survivors testified to the courage of their men while they faced the acute emergency of the ship sinking in the night, with no assurance that the German submarine would not send another torpedo to hasten her disappearance beneath the waves. British officials praise the discipline and steadfastness of the Americans.
Every American Shipyard is Busy. Washington.—The last strike in any way involving shipbuilding in the United States has been settled with the return to work of 2000 metal trades workers in New Orleans. "Not a man is idle in any shipyard in America," declared Assistant Secretary Post.
