WHAT COMES NEXT?
 For four years the energies of the world have been directly bent on the winning of the war, and today the war is won.
 For almost two years, every loyal American has placed everything else decidedly second to the war winning task, and the public mind and muscle has been directed along these channels.
 The results of these efforts are entirely satisfactory, and concerning them there are no regrets. America as a nation, escaped the real ravages of war to a large extent, and at the same time was able to throw enough energy and material as well as men, into the balance at the critical moment to win the war for and with the allied governments.
 Whether we entered the war at the right time, in just the right way, is not an issue now. The results are entirely satisfactory, and the United States was able to deliver the blow that helped to finish the Hun.
 That the war is over there can be no doubt. The final settlement will be made in the coming weeks, and it will be severe enough for the Hun. He will pay for the fun he has had during the past four years and pay dearly.
 But what comes next?
 The lesson of cooperative work in each community as well as the state and nation, and for that matter between nations, has been such that we have seen the facts driven home as never before. "United we stand," was never so true as now.
 In Oregon there are many undeveloped, and many more partly developed resources. We must have cooperative effort to bring these out to where they should be, for the benefit of the state and nation.

 In this part of Oregon, development work has not yet begun. Fifty years ago this winter, the right of white man to even exist in the valley of the Ochoco was questioned by the Red Skins, and it would seem at that time that their point was well taken.
 Today, eyes of the state and the northwest are directed on the Ochoco valley, where the people have dared to undertake the financing and construction of their own railroad and the development of an irrigation project that will make possible the production of more meat and bread stuffs within fifteen miles of Prineville than were being produced in the entire Oregon of fifty years ago.
 These are but some of the things that are to make the Ochoco valley and country tributary, one of the choice spots of the nation, and to develop the industries that are under our very eyes today, all that is needed is more of the same kind of spirit that has brought us to this point, namely: cooperation, hustle, and more cooperation.
 The war is over. Let every one prepare for the bigger and better world that is here and the better times that are coming.
