HAS PORTLAND THE SLEEPING SICKNESS?

The manner in which Portland conducts herself in matters of state-wide interest, usually, is either a gross insult to the remainder of the State, or an admission of an ignorance that is difficult to believe on the part of the two hundred or so fellows who constitute the live ones in the state metropolis.

We have the latest instance before us just now, the matter of a half million for a building in which to house the Pacific International Live-stock show.

This show is one of the finest institutions that could be situated in a State or a city, is worth more to Portland than she realizes, yet the "patronage," the paid advertising, which was done at a huge expense, a large amount of space being bought, was all placed in Portland papers, while as usual the up-state papers were fed reams of free matter telling how good the show would be and how the State should support it.

The up-state papers used this matter too, because the proposition merited it, but were not even given a look-in in the paid advertising.

Where will Portland get her fat steers, bulls and the rest of the stuff to fill that building, without the aid of the state press? Where will the crowds come from to fill the hotels if the state press does not help to "sell" the idea of attending the show to the live stock people? It is a notorious and shameful fact that the live stock show to this time has been a struggling failure because of the lack of attendance from Portland herself.

We up-state fellows, all progressive stockmen and many others attend these shows at an expense that would perhaps average not more than $75 each, yet the manager of the average Portland business house will not pay the eleven cents necessary each way to attend, even for a part of a day. This is a fact, and a shameful one that Portland will not wish to admit.

It is necessary on various occasions for we who are attempting to make a country out of Oregon, "outside of Portland" as they like to put it sometimes in the metropolis, to journey to that city in an attempt to secure cooperative support for various enterprises, in most instances.

As soon as we are introduced to the manager of the average business house there, a disinterested attitude is assumed, and while we are usually given courteous treatment, the result is usually a refusal or a statement of uncertain tone that does not lend assistance to any venture "outside of Portland."

We believe it is a fact that the heads of ninety per cent. of the Portland concerns have never seen ten per cent. of the territory in the State outside of the Willamette valley.

We believe it is a fact that half of these men would not make a trip through the interior of the State if their expenses were paid on that inspection tour.

We believe that without the aid of a map most of these men would not be able to tell whether Prineville is situated on the eastern or the southern border of the state, when as a matter of fact it is in the geographical center, and also as a matter of record thirty per cent. of all the cattle killed at the North Portland yards came from this point year before last.

We believe further that Portland will never be the town it should and might be if its business men could be awake to their gross and shameful ignorance of the true conditions in the State, its resources, its possibilities, and with the hope of stirring some of these worthy gentlemen out of their apparent sleeping sickness, these few lines are written.

SOME PLAIN FACTS

Some of the plainest statements of facts regarding the Oregon Land Fraud trials that were held in this state during 1905 that have yet been published have recently appeared in the Portland Telegram.

There is nothing new in these statements of fact to most of the people of this county who resided here during those years. Most of us came in contact in some manner with the Heney-Burns machine, their gang of detectives and spies.

The State was done a mighty wrong by those men, who had the machinery of the United States, thanks to the political line-up then existing, at their backs, Senator Mitchell, one of the truest and most able statesmen that ever represented Oregon in Washington was sent to his grave by the work of the machine, dying as they said of a broken heart, C. W. Fulton the ablest perhaps of the old Oregon delegation, and our own representative J. N. Williamson, who was in a position to become a mighty power for the development of the eastern part of the State, all killed politically by men who stuffed the jury box as a part of their misdeeds to gain the end sought in the cause of right. The loss of this part of the State was especially great because of the fact that Mr. Williamson is the only representative we ever have had and being especially qualified to work for the needs of the interior.

In publishing these facts the Telegram has done a service to the people of the State, and at the same time showed the hand of the Portland Journal, which publication, regardless of the show recently made to do the people of the State a favor in attempting to have these old cases reinvestigated, does not dare to print all it knows regarding them, for fear of being thrown in a decidedly unfavorable light.

We believe every man is entitled to his political or religious views, that every paper should stand for the things that are right as its publishers see them, but any individual or publication that will countenance the operations of the Heney-Burns hand-picking of jurors, for example, is to be viewed with distrust and in view of the published photographic copies of these documents that have appeared in recent issues of the Portland Telegram, it is up to Mr. Jackson's Oregon Journal (She Flies With Her Own Wings) to explain his position or forever remain silent as champion of the common people "bless 'em."
