DAYLIGHT SAVING LAW IS VETOED

Washington.—President Wilson vetoed the bill repealing the daylight saving law.

The president said he returned the bill without his approval with "the utmost reluctance" because he realized "the very considerable, and in some respects very serious inconvenience, to which the daylight-saving law subjects the farmers of the country."

Declaring the pressing need of the country was for production by industry, the president said he had been obliged to "balance one set of disadvantages against another," and decide which was the more serious for the country.

This was the second time the president had vetoed repeal of the law. White house officials and members of congress could not recall a previous instance of a president having twice vetoed the same bill. Leaders in congress doubt that the two-thirds' vote necessary to pass the repeal measure over the president's head can be obtained.
