GETTING RID OF THE "BLUE MONDAYS"

The average housewife's weekly calendar might run something like this: Sunday, Washday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and so on, round the week. Washday is the one dreaded day in many families, and has been for a long time. In the days of the p labor it was possible to get the washing done without much trouble, worry, or expense. The washwoman used to be a valuable institution in most every community. But she has departed very largely and while, in the city, the power laundry has taken over a part of the burden, washday, on the farm, presents a condition which most farmers' wives would like mightily well to be rid of.

With one of the farm electric plants which so many farmers are buying nowadays, the farmer's wife can find a ready solution for the burdens of washday.

This is through the use of the electric-motor-driven washing machine. It takes only a quarter hour over motor to run a good, family-sized washing machine and the electric current from the farm electric plant will run the washer for about one cent an hour, that is, where the electric plant has been carefully selected and one of the modern, air-cooled and direct-connected plants is in use. With such a plant with kerosene used for fuel, electric current is produced for some four or five cents per kilowatt. Now this four or five cents' worth of electricity may be translated into power which will do the washing complete, cleaning, rinsing and wringing the clothes and it will do this while the housewife is busy at some other work, like doing up the breakfast dishes, making beds, packing the children's lunches, looking after the chickens, or, blissful thought, actually sitting by the window and reading or just retiring, while the busy washer turns and turns away without the aid of human hands.

Electricity for the washing machine shortens the washday. The clothes are on the line sooner and ready for the ironing basket sooner. Electricity will chase away "Blue Mondays" if you hitch it to the washday and The Inland Auto Company can show you the best outfit for producing the "home made" electricity for power and lighting—the Dele-Light outfit.

SEEING WHAT THE BATTERY DOES

"A good many things of utmost importance are constantly going on inside the box of every automobile starting and lighting battery," says Mr. Mansfeld, the local Willard Battery expert, at the Inland Auto Company.

"yet it is very seldom that any of us has an opportunity of watching these changes as they take place."

"The whole process is shown in an unusual way in a demonstration given at the technical school conducted by the Willard Storage Battery Company. At this school a number of cells are assembled in glass jars and are charged and discharged under conditions which closely approximate the conditions of actual service."

"To show what happens to these cells when impure water is used, several foreign substances are dropped into the various batteries. To one nitric acid is added; into another a little sal ammoniac is dropped; a little hydrochloric acid is put into a third. All the results are carefully noted by students. In this way the Willard service station experts who attend the school are enabled to tell at a glance not only when impure water is used in a battery, but exactly what sort of impurity is interfering with the proper work of the cell."

BABY MARIE IN SERIOUS DRAMA

Baby Marie Osborne has gone into serious drama. This bright-eyed screen star, who has been seen here in lively comedy, will appear in a new Pathe production, "The Voice of Destiny" that comes to the Lyric theater Monday.

"The Voice of Destiny" has a very strong dramatic plot, in which mystery element is introduced early in the play and which remains unsolved until the very climax. Baby Osborne and a dictaphone (not the dictagraph of detective story lore) solves mystery, and the guilty party is punished and there is a happy, if unusual ending.

There is comedy relief aplenty in "The Voice of Destiny" for Baby Marie's smile couldn't remain obscured very long. The little star and her playmate the clever little colored kid whom they call "Snowball" now, are seen in charming situations. "The Voice of Destiny" will play for two days starting Monday.
