A NEW EXECUTIVE AND A NEW STAFF.

It is commonly understood, of course, that government jobs are divided into four general classes—those filled by the President with senatorial approval; those filled by the President or one of the executive officials without senatorial approval; those within the civil service and those carried on the rolls because of special fitness for the work to which they are assigned, but without regard for the civil service, for example, certain groups of chemists and special experts and charwomen and laborers. In all, there are in the government service, according to the last official register, approximately 770,000 men and women.

The jobs which Mr. Harding will have to fill, numbering about 25,000, are the most important in the government service. They include appointments to be justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; the members of the cabinet; the members of the Interstate Commerce and other commissions and bureaus; to the posts of ambassador and minister to various foreign countries and the like.

While President Harding has a monumental task ahead of him, so have the members of his cabinet big duties awaiting their attention. Not many people, perhaps, bother to acquaint themselves with the scope of the work of the ten different departments, which are separate from the independent government agencies, some 35 in number. Aside from the weekly or semi-weekly meetings they have with the President, the different cabinet officers have a multiplicity of duties, details of which possess a relationship and a complexity not, perhaps, to be fully comprehended from such a brief survey as is herein practicable.

With attention to the routine alone, this summary of departmental tasks is given:

Department of State, in charge of the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, who ranks first in the cabinet, conducts, under the direction of the President, the negotiations of whatever character between the United States and all foreign countries; maintains in foreign countries a corps of diplomatic officers and consular agents; issues passports; publishes the laws and resolutions of Congress and proclaims amendments to the Constitution; medium of correspondence between the President and the chief executives of the different states.

Treasury Department, in charge of Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, charged with the management of the national finances; collects the revenue such as tariff levies income and other federal taxes; makes disbursement of public funds in accordance with the appropriations of Congress; maintains all the public buildings; in charge of the coast guard and public health service.

War Department, under Secretary of War Weeks, is in charge of all matters of national defence and sea coast fortifications as they relate to the army; is in charge of all questions referring to the support, transportation and maintenance of the army; supervises river and harbor improvements; plans and locates all bridges over navigable waters; operates certain transportation facilities on the island, canal and coast-wise waterways.

Navy Department under Secretary Denby, in charge of the construction, manning, arming, equipment and employment of the vessels of war flying the flag of the United States; this includes all the war vessels of the United States navy, the aircraft, auxiliaries, etc.; enlisted and officer personnel; in charge of the United States Marine Corps and its activities.

Department of Justice, under Attorney General Daugherty, represents the United States government in all legal matters; gives advice and opinions when required by the President or executive departments; conducts prosecutions against violators of the federal criminal and civil laws; maintains the bureau of investigation for the collection of information regarding law violation; supervises federal prisons.

Postoffice Department, under Mr. Hayes, the Postmaster General, supervises the federal postal service; in complete charge of the receipt and delivery of the mails; negotiates the mail treaties by which foreign mail delivery is accomplished; contracts for transportation of the mails; investigates mail train and post office and other robberies relating to the mails; sells stamps, money orders, and attends to all matters of postal finance.

Department of the Interior, under the Secretary of the Interior, Senator Fall, is charged with the supervision of public business relating to patents for inventions, pensions and bounty lands, the public lands and surveys, the Indians, education, the geological survey, the reclamation service, the bureau of mines, the national parks, the Capitol building, grounds and the distribution of government appropriations for agricultural and mechanical colleges.

Department of Agriculture, under Secretary Wallace, is charged with promoting agriculture in its broadest sense in all parts of the United States and the territorial possessions; includes the United States' weather bureau and its complete forecasting service; administers the national forests; in charge of the pure food and drug law through the Bureau of Chemistry; studies and reports improved methods for agricultural activity and marketing.

Department of Commerce, under the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, promotes the commerce of the United States in its mining, manufacturing, shipping, fishery and its transportation interests, maintains the lighthouse service, takes the census, prepares and distributes the statistical information relating to foreign and domestic commerce, supervises the fisheries industry, inspects steamboats and prescribes aids for the protection of life at sea, maintains the standard of weights and measurements.

Department of Labor, under Secretary Davis, fosters and promotes the welfare of the wage earners in the United States, seeks to improve their working conditions, holds the power to act as mediator in labor disputes, collects and publishes statistics relating to the condition of labor and its products, supervises the immigration of aliens, directs the administration of the naturalization laws, makes studies and reports for the improvement of child life and welfare of children.

From apparently reliable sources there has come the word this week that President Harding plans an actual combination of the War and Navy Departments, and that the combination of the two departments under one head will take place as soon as the details can be outlined and the inter-relationship logically defined. Mr. Weeks, as Secretary of War, and Mr. Denby, as Secretary of the Navy, are said to have accepted their cabinet appointments with this understanding of President Harding's expectations. The combination of the two departments would be known as the Department of National Defense, which would consist of three branches—army, navy and air service—with a Secretary of National Defense in charge and an under secretary heading each of the branches.

Fact is, it's a great inheritance of hard problems which the whole Republican administration has received from the eight year's reign of Wilsonian Democracy—problems confronting President Harding, his cabinet, the Republican Senate and the Republican House—but the Republican victory in the last election was so great as to create this auspicious circumstance; Democratic representation is too weak to lift any monkey wrenches, to say nothing of throwing them into the government machinery once it has been reconstructed.—National Republican.

To Automobile Owners

DID THE FACT ever occur to you, the automobile owner, that your car was to be compared to the modern railway locomotive? Most all of you know that when the locomotive arrives at the division point it is turned over to skilled mechanics who carefully examine every bolt and bearing, see that the monster is getting proper lubrication, in fact make a thorough examination of the entire machine.

Your car needs the same attention—a loose shackle bolt eventually means a broken spring. Poor water circulation means loss of power and an overheated motor, and lack of attention to your battery means "stalled," mosttimes a great distance from a telephone, and general inattention means a great deal more upkeep and running expense.

We take care of all those things in our new service plan, at a very nominal cost to you, a plan that will repay you a thousandfold in time and money saved. Come in and talk it over.
