BETTY

By RUBY H. MARTYN.
© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Betty Allen's red hair flamed loose in the sunshine as she ran up the trim gravel path with the letter clutched in one hand and the soft parcel tucked carefully under her blue gingham sleeve. Back in the kitchen she tossed the parcel on the chair and hurried to turn the ham in the smoking spider. The letter she tore open and read in the fragrant haze of the cooking dinner.

"Very nice about wanting me to come and send a present to wear," she paraphrased at the end.

Her brother Bob mumbled something into the hand towel he was using on his sud-sud-sud face. Bob understood that the letter was from a cousin, Jane Dow Winslow, whom Betty had discovered in Don's home city. Don had worked on a local road survey for a month, that was long enough for him to discover Betty, and now Betty was going to visit this cousin Jane, whom the Allens had never seen, and run the gauntlet of Don's family under her wing.

"I suppose city people expect a country girl to have dowdy duds," flared Betty, as she flipped the ham again. "I just guess they don't need to send me clothes, if we are poor."

"Find out what's come before you fly clear off the handle," suggested Bob.

Betty snipped the parcel string with the lampwick scissors, which happened to be handiest. The stiff paper and soft, white inner wrappings fell from the folds of silken stuff that billowed out over her firm, brown hands.

"Red!" gasped Betty, flushing hotly. Bob gazed with manly admiration at the crepe de chine that glowed and gleamed in his sister's hands. He had never imagined that stuff for clothes could be quite so alluringly beautiful.

"It's a peach of a color," he said. "It'll make me look like a perfect fright! You never heard of a red dress on a red-haired girl, and I might just as well give up the whole trip as wear this color a single time. And it's real crepe de chine that I've always dreamed I might have a dress of if fairy dreams could come true!" wailed Betty.

"Then why in tunket didn't they send a black piece of goods?" temporized Bob.

"I hate black," flashed Betty. "I hate the everlasting colors red hair has to wear, and if you know how I want to get into the glarigest red that other girls can, you'd wonder I don't use hair dye."

"Send the goods back. Tell the Jane we can get up clothes enough for you," said Bob.

"I'd go in my old silk if this wasn't red. I don't know just what to think, Bob. Either cousin Jane is an awful cat, or she wants to see her present come flying back, and I declare if she is going to see that!"

There was a wry smile on Betty's piquant face as she put the smooth folds of the silken stuff on a parlor chair. She was determined to run the gauntlet of cousin Jane and the Winslow family with her head in the air. Betty was flying the colors of her love for Don as she made drastic plans for that crepe de chine.

She reached the city some weeks later in the dusk of a feathery snow. Her new shoes slid awkwardly on the soft rugs that lay on cousin Jane's polished floors. There were strange hands to take off her wraps; and up in her own room Betty peered with some alarm at the cavernous closets and tiled bath and cheval mirrors and shaded lights.

Could Betty have guessed it, Cousin Jane in her own luxurious room was even more uncomfortable.

"The child has red hair!" she wailed. "I knew Don raved about red, but I never guessed the reason."
Cousin Jane's husband grinned.

"I wonder if her temper matches," he ventured.

"I wonder what she thought of that red stuff. The Allens always did have sense enough to know when they are insulted. But if Betty shows herself to Don Winslow in that shade of red he'll blink."

Cousin Jane snapped the clasp of her bracelet. She crossed the hall and knocked at Betty's door. When there was no answer she pushed open the door. A plain brush lay on the dressing table; Betty's shoes stood with heels against the wall, but Betty herself was not there.

Don's voice was what Cousin Jane heard as she went down the wide staircase, and a slender, radiant Betty in shimmering black smiled shyly from the deep chair Don had drawn to the open fire.

At midnight Betty knelt by Cousin Jane, too happy for many words.

"Don's determined to keep loving me, and his people were dear. And when I'm so happy I don't want to be going a bit under false colors. Dear Cousin Jane, I dyed your beautiful red present until it was black as a hat. And I made it into a dress because I wanted Don to keep loving me."

"You are a dear, loyal diplomat," smiled Cousin Jane.

Betty jumped to her feet.

"Trust a red haired girl!" she said, gaily.

Last Big Block of the Canadian Pacific Reserved Farm Lands

This announces the offering of the last big block of the Canadian Pacific Reserved Farm Lands. Until this block is disposed of, you can secure at low cost a farm home in the Western Canada that will make you rich and independent. The country is ideal for mixed farming as well as grain growing. Later, the same lands can be bought only from private owners—and naturally, prices will be higher. Never again on the North American Continent will farm lands be offered at prices so low.

Your Last Big Opportunity
This block contains both fertile open prairie and park lands in the Lloydminster and Battleford Districts of Central Alberta and Saskatchewan. You can buy farm lands on the rich prairie of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta at prices averaging about $10 an acre. Or land in Southern Alberta under an irrigation system of unailing water from big reservoirs and up.

20 Years to Earn and to Pay
The Canadian Pacific offers you this land under a plan of long term, easy payments that is remarkable in the history of farm investments. You pay down 10%. Then you have no payment on the principal until the end of the fourth year, then fifteen annual payments. Interest is 6%. In Central Saskatchewan, wheat yields grow the world's prime wheat. World's price cuts were grown at Lloydminster.

Lands Under Irrigation
In Southern Alberta, the Canadian Pacific Railway has developed the largest individual irrigation undertaking on the American Continent. This district contains some of the best lands in Canada. An excellent supply of water is administered under the Canadian Government. Prices range from $10 an acre up, on the same easy payment terms. $3000 loan in improvements. Twenty years to pay back.

No Taxes on Improvements
There's a small tax on the land—nothing more than the tax for all purposes but there are no taxes on your live stock, buildings, improvements, implements or personal effects. Good markets, modern schools, roads, churches, amusements, make farm life desirable and attractive. Here you can achieve independence.

No Sale Without Investigation!
The Canadian Pacific will not sell you a land until you have inspected it. You must be satisfied—and every question answered—before taking up your home. Investigation is invited and made easy. This announcement calls attention to the last great block of Canadian Pacific Reserved Farm Lands.

Special Rates for Homesteaders and Full Information
Send address and name to homesteaders and full information. Send one for free literature package about land values, surveys, title, mortgages, etc. Do not delay. Write TODAY!
