THE NEW MAID

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

(Copyright, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Donald Sinclair picked up the magazine that had been left in the subway, idly. He had no special interest in it; it had merely been occupying the space where he wished to sit.

Back in his mind, but not in so exaggerated a proportion as to mar his outlook, was the wish that he was going home to a well-regulated household, to a dinner nicely served in their own small dining room instead of one that his sister Jean had had to prepare after her own hard day's work. Both he and Jean detested having meals outside and Jean preferred coming home late from the office and preparing dinner rather than to trail out to a restaurant.

Their experience with housekeepers had been unsuccessful.

It was with a very grave delight then that Donald found the magazine he had picked up so idly to contain something that pointed the road to happiness. A letter of recommendation, apparently lost by its owner, was sticking between the pages of the magazine. It read:

"To whom it may concern: This is to state that Gladys Turner has been in my employ as general housekeeper for three years. She is an excellent cook, is strictly honest, neat, clean and a splendid manager. She is leaving my employ only because my son has fallen in love with her, and made it trying for her with his attentions. She has my highest recommendation."

The letter was signed and the telephone and address of the writer added.

Donald did not confide in Jean until his plans should be perfected.

The outcome was that Gladys Turner called at the office of Sinclair & Co. and was ushered in for an interview with Donald.

She was neatly dressed and very nicely spoken.

"My sister and I are out all day—my sister being the editor of a woman's magazine. I want very much to have you take entire charge of the home, planning meals and everything done that will leave my sister entirely free from worry. I will pay you $100 a month, and there is a very dainty room in our apartment for you. We are not in any way difficult people," he added with a rare smile.

Gladys Turner fidgeted in her chair and tried to speak easily, but her task was hard. Finally she found her voice.

"I—I have never worked in this way," she confessed. "That letter is part of a story I am writing, but—I am not too well fixed financially, and really am honest and a splendid cook and could manage your household very easily." She looked up at Donald, awaiting his verdict.

That she had quite taken away his breath was a self-evident fact.

"All I ask," she added a trifle wistfully, "is to be left alone to write when I am finished with your work."

"That seems little enough to ask," Donald said out of the maze of his thoughts.

So it happened that an evening later Jean arrived home after a weary day to find a daintily set table, a beautifully cooked meal and a neat girl in spotless apron ready to serve her and her brother in their own dining room.

Donald had sprung many happy surprises on his sister, but this crowned them all. It was like a dream come true.

"Are you quite, quite sure I will not awaken to have to run out and get a few chops, a baker's cake and some tinned vegetables for our dinner?" she questioned Donald.

"Not this time, sis. The way I got that girl would almost make a movie plot. I'll tell you all about it later."

And Gladys reached a splendid contentment in the home of the Sinclairs. She had hours of uninterrupted concentration, and her material was finding ready markets.

Donald began to feel terribly aggrieved that he was excluded from the long confabs held between Jean and Gladys.

Donald was pacing the floor in lonesome wrath. He frowned darkly, then beamed as suddenly.

He strode into the hall and pounded on that closed door.

"Well—what's the idea?" asked Jean.

"Nothing, except that I am just darned lonesome. I want to go to the movies and no one will go with me."

Jean laughed. "We didn't hear ourselves being invited or even expressing a dislike for movies."

"Well," blurted Donald. "I didn't want Gladys to leave her position for the same reason as she left the other." He looked boyishly but very pleadingly at the two women he loved most on earth.

Gladys blushed hotly and Jean shot a swift glance at her brother.

She had known this was coming and hoped for its early settlement, but Donald's way was a bit unusual. She smiled up at him. Her eyes then lingered on the blushing girl who had risen to such splendid heights both as a woman and a writer.

There was a lovely glow in the girl's eyes as she looked up.

"I have not as yet been annoyed by attentions," she said softly.

"But look out from now on," laughed Donald, and swept both women into a great bear hug.

Harp of the Mosquito.

There is an apparatus, for a long time overlooked or neglected by the investigators, at the base of the mosquito's wings, whereby the characteristic humming of that insect may be produced. The species examined is the anopheles maculipennis and the apparatus consists of a slightly movable bar provided with a series of well-marked teeth which, as the wings are raised and lowered, rasp across a series of ridges.

Dizzy's Venus.

Sir William Harcourt went once to visit Lord Darnley at Huzhenden and the couple were showing him their household goods. In the dining room, looking at an old Italian picture of Venus, "Wonderful!" said Sir William. "Ah! but she's nothing to the Venus that Dizzy has in his bedroom!" exclaimed funny little Lady Beaconsfield. Sir William, who was standing by the picture at the moment, turned round and made her ladyship a deep bow.—London Mail.

Electricity and Chinese Demons.

Word has come from Shanghai that employes of the China Electric company recently called in a native priest to drive away the demon in an electric buzz saw which had cut off two of the operator's fingers. After the ceremony the workmen returned to their tasks contentedly. The manager of the plant felt that, despite the superstition displayed, these Chinese workmen were accepting electricity in their own way.—North American.

And Few Mourned.

All the four Georges who have in the past reigned in Britain died on Saturday, and two in the month of June. The dates are: The first George on June 10, 1727; the second on October 25, 1760; the third, January 29, 1820, and George IV on Saturday, June 26, 1830.

Trail's End.

Speaking of pathetic figures, what is more pitiful than the predicament of that Ithaca man who discovered that he had been corresponding with his own wife through a matrimonial bureau?—Buffalo Express.

Defacing the Flag.

Driving nails or tacks in the flag to hold it in place is considered wrong. Preferably it should be tied with red, white or blue cord, or tri-colored cord. No advertisement or lettering of any sort should ever be placed upon the flag, or any object except the Bible placed upon it. Draping a pulpit desk with the flag, it being held in place by a Bible, is permissible.

Anything to Please.

Adv. Wanted—Girl for general housework, any old kind; family of three adults. Nice, large, airy room; no washing nor much of anything else to do. Last girl quit because we invited some relatives to help us celebrate Patriots' day. Next Patriots' day, if the girl demands it, we will disown our relatives and renounce our country.—Boston Transcript.

Hallowe'en of Pagan Origin.
Hallowe'en, or All Hallow's eve, is clearly a relic of pagan times, for there is nothing in the church observance of the ensuing day of All Saints to have originated such extraordinary notions as are connected with this celebrated festival, or such remarkable practices as those by which it is distinguished. In Roman Catholic countries Hallowe'en is the occasion for visiting the cemeteries and laying flowers on the graves of friends and relatives, but in parts of Scotland and elsewhere the night is devoted to merry-making and divination of the future.
