MODESTY

Is the strongest characteristic of a watch. If you would know why, ask

Wilson, the Jeweler,

Tacoma St., St. Johns, Ore.

In The Circuit Court of The State of Oregon for Multnomah County,

In the matter of the application of Hattie Salomon to have registered the title to lots 5 and 6 in block 15 of James John's 2d Addition to the Town of St. Johns, in Multnomah county, State of Oregon, vs. Robert Catlin, as administrator of the estate of James John, deceased; P. A. Marquand, Chas. F. Ladd, E. C. Bronaugh, A. F. Fiegel, as trustees of the James John's Trust under the will of James John, deceased; John A. Carr, Mary Annon, Lulu Timney, Bert John, Walter John, Samuel John, Adelia John, Elizabeth E. Strombridge, James John, Virginia Lawson, Emma Ward, Eva Faith and Mary J. Rinker, Mary J. Smith, Henry W. Smith, Philip A. Smith, Martha Frances Poff and John Poff, her husband, Mary A. Carey and Carey, her husband, Elsie L. Booser and J. M. Booser, her husband, Lizzie P. (Smith) Barbeau and Barbeau, her husband; Eugene Duval and Elmira his wife, and all others whom it may concern.

To the above named defendants and to all whom it may concern: In the name of the State of Oregon: Take notice, that on the 13th day of June, A. D. 1905, an application was filed by said Hattie Salomon in the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon for Multnomah county, for initial registration of the title to the land above described.

Now, unless you appear on or before the 17th day of July, A. D. 1905, and show cause why such application shall not be granted, the same will be taken as confessed and a decree will be entered according to the prayer of the application and you will be forever barred from disputing the same.

The Badge of Service

By Frank H. Sweet

May Allyn stepped from the elevator with a bit of lace in her hand. She walked through the rotunda, looking to right and left among the massive pillars and drooping palms. There were few persons in sight. Most of the guests were over on the beach, for it was the bathing hour. May went nearly across the rotunda before she found the object of her search—a woman in a retired corner reading a novel.

"Here you are, mamma," she exclaimed rebukingly, "and reading that novel, as I might have expected. Don't you know the characters in it would stay exactly where you leave them if you should close the book for a few hours, and this glorious weather outside is something of the present. But see here," holding up the lace for inspection, "do you think this will do?"

"For what?"

"Oh, you know, mamma! I'm to be Betty the maid in the play we're getting up and I'm to have the white badge of servitude on my head and wear a white apron and carry a broom or something. I've told it all over before, only your head's in that book. Do please shut it."

The older woman obeyed, with a sigh, and took the bit of fleecy lace between her fingers.

"No, it won't do at all, May," she said instantly, a ripple of amusement breaking the dreamy quiet of her face. "It wouldn't be appropriate."

"But why?" with an air of disappointment. "It is so pretty."

"Yes, and costly. Child, child, don't you know that bit of lace is worth as much as Betty the maid could earn in five years. You must have something cheap to be in character."

"I don't believe I have anything."

"No, I suppose not. You will have to try at one of the stores. You will need"—Mrs. Allyn's gaze went inquiringly about the rotunda until it found one of the hotel maids dusting a plant. She waited until she caught the girl's eye, then raised a finger.

"I beg your pardon, my dear," she said as the girl approached, "but my daughter here is to be in the church

"Thank you, count, see how I am glad to see you also. You are sure to like it here—even without the angel. And you, too, Mr. Bethune," offering her hand to the sculptor. "Can you not make a pretty speech like the count?"

"I am afraid not," smiling down at her. "Only that I am very, very glad to find you here, Miss Allyn. Your presence will add much to our pleasure."

"Why, really, that does very nicely."

She twirled the brush with a pretty, unconscious movement that caused the tips of its feathers to flick across one of the palm fronds near. The motion caught the count's attention, and with wondering consternation his eyes went from it to her white apron and to the badge of servitude upon her head, and his sloping shoulders stiffened suddenly into protesting reserves.

"Pardones," he rebuked, "but set is so hurry I am now. I will see. M. Bethune will tell you we have not register yet. I will do set now."

May watched him hurry away with an odd look of inquiry in her eyes.

"What's the matter with the count?" she asked innocently. "Has he forgotten something?"

Bethune laughed joyously. A moment before there had been both reserve and repression in his eyes; now they were suddenly eager, glowing, determined.

"The count's an odd sort of stick," he answered, "and his visit here is confessedly in search of a rich American wife."

He raised his hand significantly toward her head, but for a moment she looked puzzled, then a quick, comprehending flush rose to her face.

"Oh, that!" she said thoughtfully. "And you?"

Bethune laughed again. He could not help it.

"Can't you see, Miss Allyn?" he demanded. "I fancied it was sticking out all over me. Over yonder I was a poor devil of an artist and you a rich heiress, and now—oh, my!"

There was the soft rustle of silk moving across the carpet. May raised her finger.

"Mamma is coming!" she warned. "I don't care," impetuously. "I've got to speak now. I can't wait another day. Where can I see you alone?"

She hesitated, then appeared to consider.

"The maids and nurses usually walk on the beach at about 3 o'clock," she said demurely. "I expect I shall be there."

At 4 o'clock two wheel chairs swept leisurely down the bicycle avenue and on past the Breakers toward the beach. It was the hour for Mrs. Allyn's daily outing, and she preferred to take it in a wheel chair and leisurely. The occupant of the other chair was Count Fortegan, and from the satisfaction on his face he had evidently discovered the mistake. As they turned toward the beach path they saw two figures approaching them only a few yards away.

"There's May now!" exclaimed Mrs. Allyn. "Suppose we wait a few minutes and speak with her."

The count's face grew sager, and words of an elaborate apology began to form in his mind, but as the figures drew near and he saw the expression on their faces as they looked at each other the apology died away and a Parisian oath, muttered under his breath, took its place. He merely bowed politely and then waited for Mrs. Allyn to give the signal to go on.

The girl removed it, with a pleased look.

"This is exactly what you want, May," went on Mrs. Allyn, holding it up critically. "Yes."

But May had snatched the little cap of her own name uttered by a group just in front of her attracted her attention, and she discovered that a gentleman in the company of several ladies was pointing out another lady at some distance to his companions as herself.

"Oh, dear, she's not at all pretty!" said one of the ladies, putting up her opera glass.

"Quite vulgar looking," said another, adjusting hers to a better focus.

"So dreadfully masculine," added a third. "Any one might guess she was a bluestocking. I pity her husband. I declare."

"She is masculine," said the gentleman complacently, pleased to have interested his companions. "You can see that even from here. But you can't appreciate her ugliness without seeing her full face. She has a most appalling squint."

The authoress in question, who was neither masculine nor ugly nor afflicted with a squint, had sense of humor enough to enjoy the situation.

The leading hand.

In old days there were angels who came and took men by the hand and led them away from the city of destruction. We see no white winged angels now, but yet men are led away from threatening destruction; a hand is put into theirs which leads them forth gently toward a calm and bright land, so that they look no more backward, and the hand may be a little child's.—George Elliot

There is no knowledge that is not power.—Emerson.

Luxuriant Growth.
Pea vines reach a good growth in this vicinity—and the large size attained does not seem to lessen the yield. E. C. Cole, who lives on Richmond avenue, has just found a pea vine in his garden that measured 102 inches in length—and it bore the usual number of well-filled pods. Mr. Cole recently picked a strawberry from his garden that measured six and one-half inches in circumference—a size that breaks all records we have heard this season.
