They All Voted.

[Note. The city council voted on the "final passage" of the ordinance -suggesting the following:1

'Here's your big check," said Mayor then at the polls in happy King:
"Keep it," said Bill Nye:
You'll find it is as good as gold—
You'll need it by and bye!" vote Gaily, Gaily, Gaily!

'It's a question now in my mind," Said Mr. Shields, "just why voted so peculiarly;" 'That's what I thought!" said Nye.

Said Mr. Lindquist, "In your place Will you sell real old rye?" 'If you drop in I'll please you!"
Said jocular Bill Nye, Said Mr. Leggett, "Pll vote no!

I'm now not near so shy! I'm glad you're feeling better," Murmured gentle Mr. Nyc.

Said Mr. Edwards, "Your hotel I fear will be too fly!" You flatter me—I haven't wings," Said Airy-Pairy Nye.

said Mr. Thompson, (sawing wood),
"I'll vote thus till I die!" 'May you live to reach one hundred!" Said jolly joker Nye.

I've voted no," said Mr. Brice. "Because I'm not a guy, flut now I guess I'll call it yes;"

"You've done it now!" said Nyc. I wish you'd hurry up affairs-

Required Attention.

Apropos of poker-playing it is generally understood (newspapermen know nothing personally about the right hand-unless the mother the game) that a pursuit of the festive amusement requires strict across the knees with the face attention to detail. Here is a story that will be read with interest by a coterie of players who assemble regularly in a little club room in Portland.

An elderly man, who is an inveterate player, came home well beyond midnight. His long, white beard was plentifully soiled with tobacco juice. In answer to the query of his wife as to what it meant, he explained that he had been "sitting in" a game.

"But couldn't you turn your head to spit?" asked the tolerant spouse. "Not with them fellers," responded the old man.
