CAPT. GOODRICH

Passes Away at His Home in This City Sunday Morning.

As the result of a bullet wound in his stomach received during the civil war, William Wordsworth Goodrich passed peacefully to rest at his home on Burlington street Sunday morning. His health had been quite poor for several months and his death was not unexpected.

Captain Goodrich, by which title he was familiarly known, was a man well known by all our people. Having resided in our city for a period of nearly three years, during which time he was actively interested in our municipal affairs, his figure became familiar to all. For the past year Mr. Goodrich was city engineer, and many of St. Johns' finely graded streets are silent testimonials of his skill in street grading. The city hall now under course of construction was designed by him, and as long as he was able to be about, he watched and supervised its erection with a careful eye.

Captain Goodrich was a man of ability. Endowed with an intellect that was exceedingly bright he was an honor to his profession. He was a man who keenly enjoyed his home, and was never happier than when around his own fireside. He was a firm believer in St. Johns' future greatness, and was greatly interested in anything that tended to the advancement and development of the peninsula. He believed that the peninsula would in no great length of time contain one of the largest and most important cities of the world.

As a man Capt. Goodrich was well liked and respected. Of a kindly disposition and courteous demeanor he made friends wherever he went. Of an optimistic temperament he constantly looked upon the brighter side. Being of a persistent nature no amount of opposition or persuasion could swerve him from his course if he thought he was right. As a civil engineer and architect his work was of a high order and he was well versed in all lines of his profession.

Capt. Goodrich was proud of his ancestry and loved to tell of the prominent figures that composed his family tree. Owing to the wound in his stomach which gave him considerable trouble and annoyance he moved from place to place in the endeavor to secure relief by a change of climate.

Capt. Goodrich was not a local character, but was known throughout the United States. He was a prominent figure in the construction of the famous Monitor during the Rebellion, and laid down the old "cheese box" from the model and superintended her construction at Greenpoint, N. Y. Many and interesting were the narratives he has told relative to its construction and the derisive remarks made in connection with its possibilities at that time. Mr. Goodrich was a member of its crew during the memorable engagement with the Merrimac and is survived by only two who participated in the fight on the Monitor. Later he entered the secret service of the government and was in many stirring engagements during the war. Many times he was offered a pension for his valuable and efficient services, but he persistently refused to accept it.

Capt. Goodrich was born in the year 1841, and began life as a civil engineer. After his discharge from the army service he took up architecture, which with engineering he followed until the end of life. He resided for several years in New York city. Later he moved to Denver, Col., where he became associated with the engineering of the Oregon Short Line from Salt Lake to Portland. Afterward he resided in Boise, Idaho, for some time. He was instructor in civil engineering at Berkeley, Cal.; New Orleans, La., and Baltimore, Md. Later he moved to Los Angeles, Cal., then to San Luis Obispo, then to San Jose, and then to Portland and finally to St. Johns.

Capt. Goodrich was a nephew of General Lafayette, of Revolutionary war fame; a relative of Admiral Goodrich, and a descendent of William Wordsworth, the English poet, and after whom he was named. He was a personal friend of President Lincoln and was intimately acquainted with many of the prominent men of the present day in the affairs of the nation.

Like his ancestor Capt. Goodrich composed a number of poems and was an able contributor to numerous newspapers and periodicals. A member of no church or christian organization, yet he constructed 60 church edifices. He was charitably inclined and did much to relieve the distress and suffering of mankind. While he had his faults as all mortals have, they were few.

A widow and the following sons survive: William M. and Thomas M., architects in New York; Ivan L., ship chandler in Savannah, Ga., and C. L. Goodrich, who has been associated with his father in the office which they maintained in Portland.

Funeral services were held at the Elks' Temple, Portland, Tuesday afternoon at 1:30. The ceremony was conducted by the Elks, according to the rites of the order. Rev. Fred J. Warren of the Congregational delivered an eloquent and appropriate sermon over the remains. Interment took place in the Riverview cemetery.

COUNCIL

What Was Done at the Meeting Tuesday Night.

A short and uninteresting meeting of the Council was held Tuesday evening. Little business of importance was transacted and the session was calm and peaceful. The motion for adjournment was made with surprising alacrity, possibly to prevent anything coming up to mar or disturb the serenity of the sitting.

Council minutes were read and approved.

Simmons & Co. asked that warrants be paid for work on South Jersey street. The recorder was instructed to collect same at once or the property would be sold as charter directs.

Cochran & Co. requested a 30 day extension of time in finishing up the Hayes street improvement, which was granted.

The St. Johns Ferry and Transportation Co. also asked for an extension of time until April 15 for the completion of the ferry. Granted.

Sam Cochran prayed for transfer of license of St. Johns Hotel to Sherman Cochran. Granted.

Resolutions of respect on death of Engineer W. W. Goodrich were read. Ald. Norton took occasion to eulogize the late city official in an eloquent manner. Resolutions accepted and ordered placed on the records.

The following bills were allowed: Safe rent for Feb. $3.50 Rent Fire Dept. for Jan. 8.00 Cleaning Hose 4.50

The plumbing license was discussed and plumbers advised to present their ideas in the matter to council in writing. Mr. Overstreet was the only plumber present.

An application was received for the erection of a lumber shed 26x26 in the fire limits on the McDonald property. Referred to the building committee.

Richmond street viewers' report was laid on the table until the deed for street was turned over to the recorder.

READING ROOM

The Mass Meeting Saturday Night Was Well Attended.

The meeting at the school house last Saturday night to formulate plans for the establishment of a library was well attended. T. J. Monahan presided. Stirring speeches were made by Rev. Fred J. Warren and Rev. F. L. Young on the advantages of a library and public reading room. The University Quartette rendered a selection that elicited merited applause.

It was stated that $800 had been subscribed, but that $1000 was needed to carry out the plans outlined. Subscriptions were announced as follows:

Laurel Lodge of Odd Fellows, $120; M. L. Holbrook, $100; Portland Woolen Mills, $100; W. C. T. U., $25; Evangelical church, $63; Woodmen of the World, $20; United Artisans, $42; Knights of Pythias, $50; Portland Library Association, $20 per month. President Rogers of the Commercial club stated that he thought the club would donate $150.

The soliciting committee reported many subscriptions promised and that they had hopes of securing the required amount.

The Review will keep you posted.
