ATTRACTION THE BASIS

The purpose of store advertising is not merely to sell goods, but to increase the sale of goods—to make friends, build up a patronage that will not only stick, but steadily grow. Newspapers reach the greatest number of people in the immediate vicinity in the most natural way, at the least expense, and they are therefore the best of all mediums for stores. In a newspaper you follow the lines of least resistance—you follow with the stream, you talk to an audience already assembled, to people who want to read—their mental costume is right—they are on your wire and they won't ring off if you hold their interest. Attraction is the basis of all advertising—the store is the sun, the customers the planets that revolve around it. If you don't do the business it's because you don't tell the people enough about your business.

JAPANESE POETRY.

Writing Verse is a Part of the Polite Life of the Nation.

"There are no long poems in Japanese," says a writer. "A long poem is unthinkable to the people of Japan. They have what sometimes pass for long excursions in verse, but these are really nothing more than short poems strung together, lacking all unity save that of subject. The favorite forms are the hokku, consisting of three lines, the first having five, the second having seven and the third having five syllables, seventeen in all; the tanka, consisting of five lines of five, seven, five, seven and seven syllables, thirty-one in all, and the dojutsu, consisting of four lines of seven, seven, seven and five syllables, or twenty-six in all. The tanka is the classical form, affected by the standard poets of the country, while the other forms are used by every Japanese who writes at all and by many who cannot. The hokku is the greatest favorite.

"The hokku is composed impromptu upon every occasion, the writer putting into verse the thought appropriate to the moment, the incident or the associations suggested, much as the Greeks wrote their epigrams before the epigram became a little satiric sting. Hokkus are inspired by grave moments as well as by the gay ones. An old statesman on his deathbed sees a dead leaf whirled past his window, and it suggests his own faring forth on the wings of eternity, and he writes, 'A leaf whirled down—a leaf whirled down in the wind.' Nothing more, but the simple repetition pours out volumes with beauty and power.

"These little poems are so much a part of Japanese life that every cultivated person writes them, and all who go to 'view' the flowers, the blossoming of the cherry trees or the reddening maples in Ueno or other parks, write some pretty conceit in a hokku and hang it upon the chrysanthemum or lotus stalks or on the trees. The hokku may, therefore, be justly called the song of Japan, as we say a certain ecstasy in a few notes is the song of the thrush."

An Animal Born Only to Die.

The instances of natural death in the animal world are conspicuous in comparison with those in the vegetable world for their greater variety and complexity. There seems no doubt that this manner of death established itself independently in the different groups of animals. Years ago an American naturalist, Dana, discovered on the surface of the sea a little animal of so singular a character that he named it "monstrilla." It is a small crustacean skin to the cyclops so common in ponds. But, while the latter are furnished with all that is necessary to capture and digest their food, the monstrilla has neither apparatus for seizing prey nor digestive tube. It is richly provided with muscles, nervous system, organs of sense and sexual organs. It only lacks what is necessary to prolong life by alimentation. The monstrilla is doomed therefore to natural death.—Professor Elie Metchnikoff in Harper's.

The Letter of the Law.

The Hon. John Steel was a sheriff in Missouri. A new county judge was elected, and Steel, thinking to pay the judge a delicate compliment, selected for his first panel of jurors every fat man in the county. The judge weighed nearly 300 pounds. The day was hot, and Steel, when he took the jurors out to dinner, fed them so heartily that they all went to sleep during the afternoon. The judge was furious. "What do you mean," he roared at the sheriff, "by bringing those sleepyheads into court as a jury? They haven't heard any of this afternoon's evidence. I discharge the panel. Go out now and get a panel of men who will stay awake. I want men with a single eye to justice, not dolts like these!"

Steel went out and rode the county that night. When the judge appeared next morning Steel had a panel of one eyed men for him.—Saturday Evening Post.

Why He Planted.

The poor man who seeks to help, even in the smallest way, but with a right spirit, his fellowmen is of infinitely greater worth to the race than the man of millions whose chief aim and end are his own pleasure. A poor and aged man was seen planting an apple tree and was somewhat rudely accosted by a stranger who said, "Why do you plant trees when you cannot possibly live long enough to eat the fruit of them?" The poor man raised himself and, leaning on his shovel, said: "Some one planted trees before I was born, and I have eaten the fruit. I now plant for others that the memorial of my gratitude may exist when I am dead and gone."

NIGHT VIEW OF A CITY.

Carlyle's Powerful Picture of its Pathos and its Tragedy.

"Ah, my dear friend," said he once at midnight when he had returned from the coffee house in rather earnest talk, "it is a true sublimity to dwell here. These fringes of lamplight, struggling up through smoke and thousandfold exhalation, some fathoms into the ancient reign of night, what thinks Bootes of them as he leads his hunting dogs over the zenith in their leap of sidereal fire?"

"That stifled hum of midnight, when traffic has lain down to rest, and the chariot wheels of vanity, still rolling here and there through distant streets, are bearing her to halls roofed in and lighted to the due pitch for her, and only vice and misery, to prow or to moan like night birds, are abroad—that hum, I say, like the stertorous, unquiet slumber of sick life, is heard in heaven! Oh, under that hideous coverlet of vapors and putrefactions and unimaginable gases, what a fermenting vat lies simmering and hid!"

"The joyful and the sorrowful are there; men are dying there, men are being born; men are praying; on the other side of a brick partition men are cursing, and around them all is the vast, void night."

"The proud grandee still lingers in his perfumed saloons or reposes within damask curtains. Wretchedness covers into truckle beds or shivers hunger stricken into its lair of straw. In obscure cellars rouge-et-noir languidly emits its voice of destiny to haggard, hungry villains, while councilors of state sit plotting and playing their high chess game, the pawns being men."

"The lever whispers his mistress that the coach is ready, and she, full of hope and fear, glides down to fly with him over the borders. The thief still more silently sets to his pick locks and crowbars or lurks in wait till the watchmen first snore in their boxes."

"Gay mansions, with supper rooms and dancing rooms, are full of light and music and high swelling hearts, but in the condemned cells the pulse of life beats tremulous and faint, and bloodshot eyes look out through the darkness which is around and within for the light of a stern last morning. Six men are to be hanged on the morrow. Comes no hammering from the Raven's Rock? Their gallows must even now be a-building."

"Upward of 500,000 two legged animals without feathers lie around us in horizontal positions, their heads all in nightcaps and full of the foolishest dreams. Riot cries aloud and staggers and swaggers in his rank dens of shame, and the mother, with streaming hair, kneels over her pallid dying infant, whose cracked lips only her tears now moisten—all these heaped and huddled together, with nothing but carpentry and masonry between them, crammed in like salted fish in their barrel, or weltering, shall I say, like an Egyptian pitcher of tamed vipers, each struggling to get its head above the others. Such work goes on under that smoke counterpane! But I sit above it all. I am alone with the stars."—From "Sartor Resartus."

Faithful "Mammy."

A southern lady in a letter written after the close of the civil war told her correspondent: "I have something strange to tell you. Mammy has been free since before I was born. I never knew till now." She goes on to tell how she discovered the fact. The account is taken from "Dixie After the War."

I was wretched and exclaimed, "Well, mammy, I reckon you'll go too!" She took it as a deadly insult. I had to humble myself. While she was mad the secret burst out.

"Ef I'd wanted to go, I could ha' gone long time ago. No Yankees sot me free. My master sot me free."

She showed me her manumission papers in grandfather's hand, which she had worn for I don't know how long in a little oil silk bag round her neck, never caring to use them.

What the Composers Say.—Schumann is always more interesting for what he says than for the manner in which he says it. Berlioz's magnificent orchestration does not conceal his poverty of style. The dexterity of Liszt is often set to embroidery a thin or ill woven texture. Even Wagner's "romantic" operas alternate their wonderful strokes of genius with passages of sheer clumsiness or vulgarity. All these men made their own way by the force of almost unaided ability. They were saturated with the poetry of music, they were keenly susceptible to literary influence, they were full of fervor and passion, but they had not acquired the full artistry which cost Bach and Mozart so many years of patient endeavor.—Edinburgh Review.
