PRARY'S LONG NIGHT WATCH

Awaits the Coming of Dawn to Sca gin His Dash to the North. One installment of Commander

Peary's narrative in Hampton's Magazine deals with the wait through the long arctic night, from the time the Roosevelt was stalled in the ice until the coming of the dawn and the dash for the pole. Commander Peary gives a graphic picture of how the little expedition spent the tedious hours of darkness building the sledges, hunt-ing game, constructing igloos, making scientific observations. To keep the men from brooding in the unaccustomed dark, each was given a heavy burden of work to accomplish. There is a form of arctic madness, says

Peary, called piblokto.

Aside from rheumatism and bronchial troubles, the Eskimos are fairly healthy; but the adults are subject to a peculiar nervous affection which they call piblokto—a form of hysteria. Personally I have never known a child to have piblokto;" Commander Peary says. "Some one among the Eskimos would have an attack every day or two, and one day there were five cases. The immediate cause is hard to trace, though I believe it is generally a brooding over absent or dead relatives, or a fear of the future. The manifestations of this disorder are somewhat startling.
"The patient, usually a woman, begins to scream and tear off and de stroy her clothing. If on the ship, she will walk up and down the deck, screaming and gesticulating, and gen erally in a state of nudity, though the thermometer may be in the minus for-ties. As the intensity of the attack increases, she will sometimes leap over the rail onto the ice, running perhaps half a mile. The attack may last 'ew minutes, or an hour or more; and some become so crazy that they would stay out there running about on the ice in a state of nudity until they froze to death, if they were not forcibly brought back. When an Eskimo is attacked with the patient quiets down, the eyes are bloodshot, the pulse high and the fire and then fired in the air. whole body trembling for an hour or
