A Starving Industry

The Woolen trust is the most insistent of all trusts in its demands for a high tariff. This trust still calls itself an "infant industry," and its agents told the members of the fourth Friday of every month, Ways and Means committee that the trust would starve to death if the tariff were taken off of wool.

Boston, on October 16 At William Wood, president of the Woolen trust, was a witness in a suit filed against him by a man held at the home of Mrs. H. Bickwhom he had knocked down and nase. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Edlefsen, Mr. and how many automobiles he owned. "I don't know." Wood replied.

How many chaffeurs do you employ ?" asked the court.

"I never tried to keep track of them," Wood answered.
