The Allspice Tree.

The pimento, or alispice, tree is cultivated in the West Indies and Jamaica. This beautiful tree usually grows to a height of about thirty feet. It has a straight trunk, much branched above and covered with a very smooth brown bark. The leaves vary in size and shape, but are always of a dark, shining green color. During the months of July and August the tree is in full bloom, the blossoms consisting of very fragrant small white flowers. In favorable seasons the pimento crop is enormous, a single tree often yielding a hundred or more pounds of the dried spice. The berries are picked while green, because if left on the tree until ripe they lose their pungent taste and are valueless. The green berries are exposed to the sun for a week or ten days, when they lose their green color and turn a reddish brown. When perfectly dry they are put in bags and casks for exportation. The odor and the taste of the pimento berries are thought to resemble a combination of those of cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves; hence the familiar name "alispice."

A Queer Fact About Vision, In the eye itself certain things may go on which give us wrong sensations, which, although not truly illusions, are very much like them. Thus when we suddenly strike our heads or faces thing else immediately about it and for a long way on each side. But the truth is there is a large round spot somewhere near the point at which we are looking in which we see nothing Curiously enough, the existence of this blind spot was not discovered by accident, and nobody ever suspected it until Mariotte reasoned from the construction of the eyeball that it must exist and proceeded to find it.

He Would Push Too.
A gentleman with a well fed appear ance who motored over from the nearest town to deliver his lecture, "The Art of Getting On," in the village schoolroom, concluded with a fine burst. "The successful man is the goal." Before the audience made much headway with their clapping a small man at the back got in a laugh that might have come from a megaphone. The lecturer held up his hand for si-was to stand there and watch the deer disappear in the distance. Then his arm resumed its normal condition, and he started on the trail once more. After awhile he came upon the deep a second time, and again the hunter tried to raise his rifle, and again his arm refused to serve him. Then he gave it up and went home, impressed with a sense of awe and a conviction that he had better leave that particular
