M. J. McCarty, "fake" blind man, who was sentenced to 100 days on the municipal farm at Kansas City, Mo., after he had gazed for 30 seconds at a split skirt, is far from being downcast. Bryan is still being criticised for spending his vacation in delivering lectures. His critics profess to believe that Bryan cannot give any thought to the Mexican situation and other important matters unless he actually be at Washington; that any consideration he might give the question while on a lecture tour would be unofficial. Partisan press is most unjust and unkind.

At a parental gathering recently, says an exchange, a lady toasted the gentlemen as follows: Bless 'em. They share our joys, they double our expenses, they quadruple our cares, they excite our magnanimity, they increase our self respect, awaken our affections, control our property, and outmaneuver us in everything. This would be a dream world without them. In fact, I may say without fear of successful contradiction, that without them this wouldn't be much of a world, anyhow. We love them, and the dear things cannot help it. We control them and the precious fellows don't know it.

KNOWING THE FACTS

The man who knows the facts about his finances is the one who can command, on occasion, financial support.

How impossible to know any facts about one's finances when he administers his funds in cash, writing on record of his transaction as he goes along. He knows little of what he did with his money a month or a year ago; but the neat and orderly recording of receipts and disbursements on the stubs of a Peninsula National Bank check book, and on the checks themselves, writes the facts of one's finances into permanent history, and enables him to show up at any time the disposition of his resources.
