

Changed His Mind

I beheld the antlered monarch as he stood beneath the pine, With the dignity of freedom breathing forth in every line, With the small head set firmly on the proud neck, arched with grace And the clean limbs, built and moulded for the leader of the chase.

Then my heart beat hot within me and the hunter's keen desire Took possession of my being, seemed to set my brain on fire.

All the instincts of my fathers, handed down from sire to son, Wakened from their dormant slumber, sprung to life and claimed their own.

I could see those spreading antlers set above my study door And the pelt, rug of beauty, no my smoothly polished floor, Toasts and steaks and tender cutlets teased my palate with a zest.

And the prowess of the hunter nerved my arm to do its best.

Then I stalked him, slow and silent, like a tiger at his prey, Stopped and crawled and twisted onward, deftly brushed each twig away,

And the sweat streamed from my forehead and the dust was in my eyes, For I thirsted for the slaughter and the winning prize.

And at last, I see him standing motionless within my range, And his doe and fawn are feeding just beyond him, and the strange, Weirdly beautiful surroundings make a picture, calm and sweet.

And the artist in my bosom thrilled with ecstasy replete.

There he stood, a wondrous creature, moulded by the Hand Divine.

Why should I, another creature, seal his destiny? Is mine The right, with careless fingers, to meddle with life's tangled skein?

Quietly I turned and left him, turned and went back home again. — Dick Posey.

A month ago closed our eighth year of business in St. Johns. The success we may have attained has come because we have at all times given you value for your money. Stores have come and gone; we have maintained the policy of treating our patrons as we should expect to be treated were the circumstances reversed, and we are still here and increasing our sales in most of our lines from month to month.

We could not do this if we did not give you your money's worth always and adjust with a keen sense of right any difficulties that come. The time has gone forever now when it is necessary for you to send from your community to have your needs supplied. Our profits are not spent in extravagant buying but go back into the stock to increase our service in the community and to pay our employes whom we also expect and who do spend their salaries in St. Johns. Spending your earnings out of town whether going to Portland or some where else injures your own home, your community' your patriotism.

In the stock of our stores you will find everything to wear and many things to use in your home aside from as large and well sorted a grocery stock as you can find in cities twice the size of St. Johns.
