

Not Proving Popular

In a community like Oregon, producing so much raw material and having such a wealth of undeveloped resources, the need of capital to employ labor is so great that crusades against investments are not proving popular.

May 27 Portland Central Labor Council resolved to circulate petitions to annul the franchise of the Portland Gas and Coke Company, and that powerful labor organization with the backing of front page headlines in the Portland News got busy.

Alleged reasons were given for invoking the direct legislation clause of the constitution to attack investments of about three and a half million dollars, but they were not sufficient to interest the public and voters refused to sign.

The whole matter of these franchises has been fought over in the legislature and there was never a showing made before any committee of the House or Senate that the terms of the franchise had not been kept to the letter.

Franchise-baiting and capital-crushing have been a favorite game in Oregon with a certain brand of politicians but the people in general are getting wise and do not fall for the petition circulars that have behind them mere spittlework.

Central Labor Council of Portland soon discovered their movement was not popular in attacking a corporation against which the public had no grievance, and the initiative was among those failing from the start.

If anything results from this failure it will be a reaction against labor organizations that take up public affairs which is really not part of the legitimate business of trades unions.—Pacific Coast Manufacturer.

LOWERED PRICES

ON OUR GOOD GOODS

The Trade Journals are saying that there never was a time when the public was getting better prices on Merchandise.

The depressed financial situation compels the retailer to make prices that move the goods regardless of the percentage of profit consistent with the cost of maintaining business.

This is true of both small and large stores in practically all lines of business.

Many of the goods in our stores that bring good profit ordinarily are being sold at what would be actual cost if the usual expense of making sales was added to the purchase price.

If you have the means to prepare for the future, we suggest that you get
