THE RURAL PRESS THE WOMAN IN THE FIELD

The Local Paper a Most Useful Agency on the Farm-The Press, Pulpit and School a Trinity of Influence That Must Be Utilized in Building Agriculture.

By Peter Radford. Lacturer National Farmers' Union.

A broad campaign of publicity on the subject of rural fife is needed in this state today to bring the problems of the farmers to the forefront. The city problems are blazoned upon the that high standard of excellence where front pages of the metropolitan dailies and echoed in the country press, life is devoted to molding the charbut the troubles of the farmers are seldom told, except by those who seek to profit by the story, and the glitter of the puckage offtimes ob this world, women, through choice or scures the substance. A searching investigation into the needs of the farmers will reveal many inherent defects in our economic system that can be easily remedied when properly understood and illuminated by the power of the press.

The rural press, the pulpit and the school are a trinity of powerful influences that the farmer must utilize to their fullest capacity before he can occupy a commanding position in public affairs. These gigantic agencies are organized in every rural community and only await the patronage and cooperation of the farmers to fully de velop their energy and unefulness They are local forces working for the best interests of their respective communities. Their work is to build and their object is to serve. They prosper only through the development and prosperity of the community. Every farmer in this state should subscribe for the local paper, as well as farm periodicals and such other publications as he may find profitable, but he should, by all mesns, subscribe for his local paper, and no home should be without it. The local paper is part of the community life and the editor understands the farmer's problems. It is the local press that will study the local problems and through its columns deal with subjects of most vital importance to local life of the community.

A Noble Task.

In too many instances the country papers mimic the city press by giving prominence to scandals, accidents and political agitation. The new rural civilization has placed upon the rural press renewed responsibilities, and enlarged possibilities for usefulness. It cannot perform its mission to agriculture by recording the frailties, the mishaps and inordinate ambitions of humanity, or by filling Its columns with the echoes of the struggles of busy streets, or by enchanting stories of city life which lure our children from the farm.

It has a higher and nobler task. Too often the pages of the city dailies bristle with the struggle of ambitious men in their wild lust for power, and many times the flames of personal conflict mar the tender buds of new civilization and illuminate the pathway to destruction. The rural press to the governing power of public sentiment and must hold steadfast to principle and keep the ship of state in the roadstead of progress. The rural press can best serve the interasts of the farmers by applying its energies to the solution of problems affecting the local community. It must stem the mighty life current that is moving from the farm to the chies sweeping before it a thousand boys and girls per-day. It has to deal with the fundamental problems of civilization at their fountain head. Its mission is to direct growth, teach officiency and mold the intellectual life of the country, placing before the publie the daily problems of the farmers and giving first attention to the legfalative, co-operative, educational and social needs of the agricultural classes within its respective community.

The Power of Advertising. The influence of advertising is clear ly visible in the homes and habits of the farmers, and the advertising col umns of the press are making their imprint upon the lives of our people The farmer possesses the things that are best advertised.

The farmer is entitled to all the advantages and deserves all the lux urles of life. We need more art, science and useful facilities on the farms, and many homes and farms hand. are well balanced in this respect, but the advertiser can render a service by teaching the advantages of modern equipment throughout the columns of the rural press.

The farmers are in need of person al leadership. They have political lead ers, but they need local industrial community and educational leaders.

The Farm Woman Needs Rellef More Than Her City Sister.

By Peter Radford. Lecturer National Farmers' Union.

Much has been said and more written about the woman in the factory and behind the counter, but how about the woman who works in the field, I want to say a few words in her behalf. I regret a necessity that comwoman to work for a livelthood, and I favor not only shortening her hours, but freeing her from manual labor entirely. I crave for society the home is woman's throne and her acter and elevating the thought of the rising generation. But so long as necessity, will work, and perhaps they will work at one task or another as many hours per day as they please. We may pity the weak and admire the strong in their struggle, but the farm woman is entitled to her share of sympathy and reward.

All Must Toll.

when we apply it to women it becomes more seriously complicated. We will always have to work unless some political genius can put a law on the person must meet toil face to face, the best we can do is to equitably distribute the burdens and reward labor, and if there is to be a revision of wages and a shortening of hours. I want the farm woman to see the labor, and the farm woman to see the labor. share. She has more reason to complain than any other class of tollers. She has, as a rule, fewer comforts. "I had to picture to myself by less opportunity for enjoyment than her sister in the city. She has not to many conveniences and fewer lur uries and less to be thankful for than women who live in the town, but she toils on, a model of consistency, patlence and womanly devotion. Cerrewarded

The Real Labor Problem is on the Parm.

The great dailies with flaming headines deplore the lot of women who toil in the cities, the city pulpit thunders with sympathy for her, and the legislators orate in her behalf, or a speech delivered in the interest sion. The volley rang out, of the million women who labor on the farm. Where one woman works he ground and did not move n the cities in this state, there are a hundred mothers tolling in the field, and no mention is made of it. Is the woman in the city entitled to any not changed its expression. on the farm? I contend that she is not. The city woman may be more easily restrained by legislation, and she may have a more attentive audience when she cries aloud, but the real labor problem, in so far as it re ates to women and children, is on he farm-where mother and child, wielding the hoe and gathering the harvest, toil day in and day out without hope of reward.

The City Life Puny.

The farm women work from sun intil sun. They do their housework and full a half-million babes to sleep after the chickens go to roost, and they get breakfast and milk the cows before the 'ark sings. The city wo man frequently chafes under hardships that the farm woman would consider a blessing. The city people are great talkers and offtimes greats ly magnify their troubles and enlarge their accomplishments. This characteristic permeates organized society as well as enters into the individual life of cities. There are orphan asylums which are doing commendable work and should be encouraged, that boast of their accomplishments, but have seen widows in the country make a crop, drink branch water and eat corn-bread and molasses and raise more children and better children than many of these city orphan asylums. The cities need to get back to the soil with their ideals. They are hysterical, puny and feeble in their conception of life, its requirements and its opportunities.

A Painful Duty

One of the most vivid ac-counts of an episode of war comes from the Lokal Anzeiger of August 24. It is a letter from Paul Hoecker, a Berlin play-wright, now serving as Captain of the reserve. He describes a mission on which he was dispatched to search for arms in Belgian villages in which shots had been fired by civilians on German troops. His instuctions were to summon the villagers to deliver up their arms and those in whose possession arms were found after they declared that they had none were to be instantly shot.

Describing a visit to Jungbusch, he says that at one house were found an old man, a wowant, greed and mistortune prevail in man and a girl of 13. He adds: "Then a terrible thing happened. A sergeant and a private dragged a young fellow out of the house. They had found him hiding among the straw in the loft. He had in his hand a Belgian rifle loaded with five cartridges.
