Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedial treatment, which is based on the discovery of the true cause of the deafness. When this cause is discovered you have a running sound of imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely removed, deafness is the result, and since the inflammation can be taken out, this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever, since once out of ton are caused by Catarrh, which is not only a local condition, but an inflammation of the mucous surface.
We will give one Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by HALL'S CATARRH CURE, sent for circular.

How Fine 'Twould Be

Adeline, last night you looked so fair to me
I could not help but think how fine 'twould be
If you would see the evils of the dance,
And fine it would have been if you had had the chance
To stand with me and watch the mollycoddle
As you and he timed your step to a duck waddle.
Why don't you turn back your history pages
And see what is said by the wise in all the ages?
You would not look at dancing then the same
If you knew about the land from which it came,
Then before you'd dance you'd go to prison
For you'd know dancing was a relic of barbarism.
But I'll tell you frankly, and it's no jest,
You waddle about better than all the rest.—Contributed.

County Judge Tazwell has overruled the objection of protesting property owners and granted the petition for the creation of Peninsula Drainage District No. 2. The object of the district is said to be the diking and reclamation of land bordering the Oregon and Columbia sloughs near the interstate bridge. Judge Tazwell signed an order authorizing the calling of a meeting of interested property owners at the court house for Wednesday, October 10, for the further development of the project.

The class had been studying about the house fly, says Good Health, and the teacher had made much of the danger with which the germ carrying habits of the insect threaten the public health. The lesson sank deep into the mind of little George, who later was asked to write a composition on the subject. "The fly is an insect," he wrote laboriously; "he has six legs, he is more dangerous than a lion, but I had rather a fly would bite me than a lion."

Overconfidence Deplored

Roumania had been in secret alliance with Germany and Austria since 1882, and King Charles strove for a declaration on their side. Not until after his death did the allies win over Roumania.

Hope that Turkey would remain neutral did not die until hostilities began at the end of October, 1914, yet we know now, on the authority of the Kaiser, that an alliance had been concluded between Germany and Turkey on August 4, the day Britain declared war.

Land and sea attacks were to have taken the Dardanelles and to have been followed by a siege of Constantinople, but this ended in disaster.

As the logical sequel to this blasting of so many false hopes and to these military blunders, Serbia was overrun and Montenegro extinguished, but confidence still reigned. The Saloniki army was to have redeemed the country and crushed Bulgaria, but it has only cleared Western Greece and recovered Monastir. It is tied by the leg to its base.

Brusiloff's offensive was to have driven the Teutons out of Russia and to have carried the allies into Hungary, but it was stopped by pro-German traitors at Petrograd.

Roumania's invasion of Transylvania was to have turned the Teuton flank, forced a general retirement in the east and ended in the conquest of Hungary. It did not. Before Christmas, 1916, the Germans took Bucharest, and occupied two-thirds of Roumania.

In Mesopotamia the British army was to have taken Bagdad before the end of 1915, formed a junction with the Russians, and after conquering Asia Minor to have besieged Constantinople. It met disaster at Kut and a new army has taken Bagdad and advanced about fifty miles beyond, to be stopped by lack of Russian aid.

A British-Egyptian army was to have conquered Syria and joined the Mesopotamian army in its march through Asia Minor. It has entered Palestine and then halted.

Naval blockade was long ago to have starved the central empires into submission, but Mr. Gerard tells us they cannot be starved, and their morale is still so good that every allied gain is followed by repeated and furious counter attacks.

Russian revolution was hailed as the dawn of a new era for democracy the world over, and as the prelude to an offensive on the east which would hurl back the Teutons and enable the allies to end the war in 1917.

In truth, the Russians, their minds poisoned with sedition and treason, have been thrown back on north and south, and Petrograd itself is not considered safe. Russia is split into factions with a government which cannot govern, and there is great danger that all her vast resources may fall into the hands of Germany.

Germany's man power was to have been exhausted by attrition, but the labor of millions of prisoners and of conquered civil populations has enabled her to put more millions under arms, and her man power seems little nearer exhaustion than it was two years ago.

Submarine war was scoffed at and was considered to have failed when destruction of ships fell off after the Sussex agreement. In fact, that was only a period of preparation for more ruthless war without any restraint. In hope that Germany would not add the United States to her many enemies, President Wilson exercised patience and deferred preparation for two years, all to the advantage of Germany. When this country finally declared war, destruction of ships reached the maximum, but that of British ships has since decreased so materially that false confidence in defeat of the submarine has revived, though heavy French and Italian losses do not warrant it. We are warned that Germany is building more powerful and swifter U-boats but we are deceived by statistics into taking our time about building ships.

Every announcement that the allies have gained a mile or two of ground as though it were a great victory, every statement that the submarine terror has been killed, help the enemy by reviving that false confidence which prompts us to indulge in internal quarrels, in industrial strife, to make war leisurely. Every new ally adds to this sentiment. In truth, Germany has been greatly strengthened by the territory she has conquered, and, if she should gain control of Russia, she could fight indefinitely and the allies might be forced to force their way across Germany, to win a decision. Over confidence is our worst foe.
