Since it has been agreed upon by a number of representative bodies after investigation that the street car company should charge a higher rate of fare, why should it not be a good plan to have books of tickets containing twenty in all and to sell for one dollar per book. Then have it understood that all passengers not possessing a ticket must pay six cents. In this way the working man's fare need not be raised above five cents, and there would probably be enough passengers that would not go to the trouble of securing tickets to make a substantial increase in the receipts. A straight six cent fare does not seem to meet with great approval among the masses, if avoidable.
