

The Review has decided not to publish any of the details concerning the unfortunate occurrence which took place in St. Johns last week. While not publishing such items in detail may not be the part of good newspaperdom, yet, since, the Review goes into so many homes where it is read by young children, we would sooner plead guilty to this charge than place such matter before the young.

Final decision of the Portland dock commission to erect a drydock capable of lifting a 12,500-ton vessel is an earnest of the city's determination to provide adequately not only for present but for future commerce. It is an expression of confidence that Portland will load more ships as shipping finds its place on settled routes and that there will be business for the new dock by the time it is completed.

The dock commission is on the right track in voting to build the drydock and in deciding to build a second pier at St. Johns. The dead hand of the shipping board will not always be on the commerce of Portland. Its grip may be forcibly broken this year, and the more business we can accommodate the more we shall get. Modern water transportation may be established on the upper Columbia, bringing back here much of the traffic which unjammed railroads have diverted. It is necessary that Portland be ready for this new commerce when it comes. It will not suffice to begin construction when the demand arises. We should always build ahead of immediate needs.

A great merit of St. Johns terminal site is that it is large enough to admit of this continuous expansion, with such grouping of structures as will conduce to economy in operation and to the convenience of shipping men, also with space for industries which need to be near such facilities. The commission does not plan piecemeal; it plans far enough ahead to insure that each new structure will fit into its general scheme.—Oregonian.

A Fair Day's Work

With representatives of the manufacturers and the striking silk workers of Paterson at Washington today in an endeavor to have the War labor board end the present strike by fixing the hours of work on a basis fair to both employer and employed, Paterson is mightily interested in any discussion of the question as to what constitutes a fair day's work.

The organized trades of Paterson affiliated with the A. F. of L. have considered that eight hours a day, forty-eight hours a week constitutes a fair day's work. Some factions of the silk strikers maintain that a forty-seven hour week is fair, while others demand a forty-four hour week, and the proposition has also been that a five-day week of eight hours a day was all that should be worked.

Men live on what they produce. Any general reduction of the output of necessities of life lowers the standard of living. The improvement in the condition of the American people since the Revolution is due entirely to increase in production. We consume more food, more clothing, more luxuries; we are better housed and we have more amusements than in earlier years; and all of them are the fruits of labor applied more intelligently and efficiently than ever before. Modern agricultural implements and machinery driven by power have been the chief causes of the improved living conditions we now enjoy.

Ever since the steam engine was invented progress has been rapid. Labor at times has resisted the introduction of labor saving devices, yet it owes its better condition to them, because they have provided merchandise and have increased the buying power of a day's wages.

Shorter hours of work are demanded. It is probable that the eight-hour day will become the standard, but some classes of labor demand the forty-hour week which is less than a seven-hour day. If the working day is shortened to such a degree, production will be reduced and a day's wages, no matter what it may be in dollars and cents, will buy less of the necessities of life, because the total production of real wealth will be reduced.

constitute a day's work. One way of arriving at this is for each workman to consider what he would do if working for himself. If he had a little workshop or farm of his own how many hours a day would he work? If he worked too long and too hard he would wear himself out too soon. If he did not put in a good day's work regularly he would have to get along with less good food, clothing and entertainment. If the individual workman can decide what he would do for himself, he will arrive at what he should do when working for another. No industrious gardener or cobbler working for himself would call it a day after working less than seven hours. This point of view is worth taking.—Patterson News.

Nothing to Do About It

There is a pathos in the helplessness of babies— Even those that are fat and healthy and happy. A baby doesn't know what kind of a mess. It has got into by being born. Possibly if it could have had its say It would have preferred not to have been born. And babies are never consulted on that point. And so they arrive, sometimes welcome, Quite as often not. And hang around until they see. What the world is going to do for them. Pretty generally, no doubt they're disappointed. Perhaps they don't think deeply upon the subject. For a baby is not erudite. But if they have any they must be "Long, long thoughts," And however long they may be. When they're older they'll be longer. But there doesn't seem to be anything. To do about it that we can think of. Just now.—Ex.

All the way across the ocean the New York World cables a British joke which it says "goes big over there." This is the joke: "After the German fleet had surrendered in deepest humiliation, one big round-headed German" expressed his disgust. He spat into the ocean three times, once for the "damned British fleet," once for Admiral Beatty and once for the British nation saying, "That's what I think of you all."

Then a noble British tar hitched his pants and says: "Look here, Fritz. You can say what you please about the English fleet and nation and Beatty, but you'll be damned well careful WHOSE OCEAN you go spitting into."—Ex.

Arrangements are being made for the formal opening of the new pier at St. Johns terminal, which will probably take place about the first of April, according to announcement made at the Kiwanis luncheon held at the Portland hotel Tuesday. The Kiwanis club has been invited to co-operate with the Portland Chamber of Commerce in making the arrangements. B. S. McKinley, secretary, was designated to represent the Kiwanis club at a luncheon Saturday at the Chamber of Commerce. The first cargo to pass over the pier is now being assembled for shipment on the West Munham. It will be the first sailing in the oriental trade of the Pacific steamship company.

Cable the Peace Conference

America's prestige is at stake in the coming Victory Liberty Loan. The eyes of the world are fixed upon us. The nations of the world are going to rate us on this last effort. It is right that we do in the heat of the struggle, but by our condition after the fight.

One of the best guarantees of world peace for years to come would be the successful flotation of the Victory Liberty Loan for five or six billion dollars. Even a combination of powers inclined to start another war would hesitate in the face of such a display of tremendous national strength.

Every man who buys a Victory Liberty Bond next April, moreover, will be adding to the determination with which America speaks at the Peace Conference. There are undoubtedly going to be many moments during that Conference when every whit of the power of the United States will be needed to shape into actualities those ideals for which we entered the world struggle.

Let the cables carry into the Quai d'Orsay this message: "America has oversubscribed her Fifth Liberty Loan" by more than a billion dollars."

THINK STRAIGHT

This is a time for straight thinking. Make sure the other fellow is not talking drivet. Analyze his thought, don't follow it. He may be suffering with phrasalogue hemorrhage. It is epidemic now—a-days like influenza and much more serious.

For instance in regard to the Victory Liberty Loan and these fellows who thumb their vests, frown wisely, and say "Let the banks do it. They are bursting with money." They are talking drivet. It sounds fine but it isn't good sense. Nor is it good economics, which amounts to the same thing.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube becomes inflamed, a discharge of mucus is forced out, and when it is returned to its normal condition, the hearing will be restored forever, and the eye will be cured by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for literature free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.
