The Review is entered at post office in Portland, Oregon, as mail matter of the second class under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The sad intelligence reached the editor and his brother, W. L. Markle, Monday morning that their father, H. H. Markle of Clearfield, Pennsylvania, had just passed to the better world on high. He was one of the good men of this earth. Upright and honorable in all his dealings with his fellow man, he was highly respected by all who knew him. No man can say he was ever unfairly or unjustly treated by him, nor did he ever take an unfair advantage. He believed in treating all mankind fairly and kindly, and he lived his belief. He was devoted to his home and his family and was never so contented as when at his own fireside. He took a keen interest in the affairs of the world, and was well versed in all the leading topics of the day. He was a veteran of the Civil War, and had almost reached the 82d milestone on his journey through life when the Angel of Death summoned him home. For the past several years he had been in failing health. In fact all the joy of living and interest in life seemed to forsake him when his loving wife, after more than fifty years of close companionship, was called to the Great Beyond several years ago. With her passing, life for him was never afterward the same. And now his course is run, his life work is finished, the sands of life have run down, and he is happy again in a reunion with his lifelong companion that will never end, and together they will watch and wait, side by side, in that Better Land for their children as they come, one by one, when their days are done.

Surviving him are the following sons and daughters: Clarence A., Geo. N., and Chan. R., of Pittsburg, A. W. and W. L. of St. Johns, and Misses Mary and Augusta Markle of Clearfield.

Dear Mary—
I have your letter telling me how pained you are because Mrs. W— called and seemed to be so "critical." You should not blame her. She showed the proper spirit in coming to see you. I'm going to be frank and say that you should be PREPARED to entertain those who visit you. Mrs. W— lives in a beautiful home and could not help noticing things. You just go right at Tom and tell him you must have some new furniture and rugs.
Hastily—HELEN.
