St. Johns Study Club

The St. Johns Study Club was honored on Wednesday with a distinguished guest, Miss Ann Shannon Monroe, Oregon novelist and magazine writer who gave an intensely interesting informal talk on Oregon writers and the Oregon Writers' League of which she is president. Miss Monroe, who herself is nationally known as a novelist and also as a regular contributor to the Good Housekeeping magazine, is an interesting speaker and being personally acquainted with many Oregon writers of whose work she spoke, was able to touch just a little upon the personal charaeter and high ideals of each.

Miss Monroe is very proud of the record of Oregon writers, four of whom received such high honors last year, and anticipates that Oregon will in the next decade produce some of the world's best writers. The reason Oregon writers are producing such good, wholesome literature, she says, is because the early pioneers brought with them across the plains, if they brought nothing else, the Bible, Shakespeare, Pilgrim's Progress and the dictionary, and such a foundation could but produce good literature.

A short business meeting preeeded Miss Monroe's talk. Mrs. P. A. Getz reported that after a prolonged interview with one of reasonable.
