PORTLAND FIRE PULLS A MAN FROM WILLAMETTE RIVER

News Release from Portland Fire & Rescue FlashAlert: July 12th, 2015 6:05 PM
At 4:36 PM, Portland Fire responded to reports that a man had jumped off the Waterfront Seawall and was in the Willamette River, clinging to a boat just south of the Steel Bridge on the west side of the river. Within just a few minutes, Rescue Craft 1 from Station 1 arrived and loaded the man onto the rescue craft. They then transported him to the Portland Fire dock at Station 21, which is at the east end of the Hawthorne Bridge. The man was loaded onto an ambulance and transported to Emanuel Hospital for evaluation. In addition to the fireboats that Portland Fire operates, they have two "Rescue Crafts", which are fast, highly maneuverable Sea-Doo watercraft. They carry a boat operator and a rescue swimmer. These rapid-deployment vessels provide for a timely response and can often get rescuers to the scene within minutes of being deployed.
