Junior Lord of the British Admiralty, declares the navy of Great Britain must be one-third stronger than any combining of the fleets of her two possible enemies—France and Russia. He proposes the expenditure of £22,000,000 for the construction of six ironclads of the Royal Sovereign class, 12 battle-ships of the Harfieur class, 10 cruisers of the Blake class and 50 vessels of the Mavock class.

Start out with good stock. Endeavor to have your flocks uniform.

Keep everything clean; it will pay An extra dollar or two for a superior A good supply of road dust or dry earth and fine gravel are worth a good many dollars to a poultry breeder dur-ing the winter.

One of the best remedies for damp poultry-house floors, also an excellent deodorizer, is air-slacked lime. Gas lime is also good.

Do not neglect the water fountains. Keep them filled with fresh, sweet, clean water. In rainy weather keep the yards drained so that no impure water will be where the fowls may drink it.

Do not destroy eggs that have been deserted by the hen, or in cases where the incubator lamp has gone out and they have become cold. They often hatch a good percentage of strong chicks. Don't begin with too many breeds. Select the one that best suits your sur-roundings and stick to it. By careful selection you can then build up a strain that will be satisfactory to yourself and

Although a damp roosting place is an abomination, fowls prefer a wet roost free from vermin to a dry one that is infested with them. This may explain why some people's chickens prefer to roost on trees.

It may be taken as a very good rule that short-legged will fatten more rapidly than fowls "well up on their pins." This is important to the broiler raiser, whose object it is to get nice, plump birds Keep thoroughbred fowls only. There are enough breeds and enough sizes, shapes and colors for any purpose. With a mixed flock one cannot lay down any set of feeding rules or giean any reliable information from his statistics. In other words, he never knows where he is at.

Always keep shells and grit before your fowls, and for confined birds straw or refuse hay, cut about one-third of an inch in length, should be furnished them. Besides the much-needed exercise obtained by scratching in it for seeds and grain, they will eat a large portion The turkey is an industrious forager, and picks up the greater portion of its food; therefore the difference in the ington on hor bils ingressive.

It is not necessary for experimental stations to tell us that manures kept continually exposed to rain and sun must lese their essential elements, and that, too, very rapidly. We see very often streams of dark, black liquid issuing from fertilizer heaps, and perhaps running down some slope into pond or brook, where the crops are not liable to receive much benefit from them. Why are these leaks permitted and how remedied are the questions. The first is hard to answer, but the second is of no very difficult solution. Mix manure liberally with absorbents, and keep under cover. Many old-fashioned barns contain no cellars for storage of manure; and, for that matter, there are very potent objectives. cellars for storage of manure; and, for that matter, there are very potent objections to putting manure right under stock, so that poisonous gases will continually arise to befoul the air above. Why not build a cheap "lean-to" against the barn to cover the manure which is cast out? This may be made very rough and inexpensive and provided only with a roof (sides would be better). The idea, of course, is to prevent the water from eaves and sky from leaking through the manure and removing the best and most available portions. Bed the stock well with straw and absorbents sufficient to retain all the liquid. ents sufficient to retain all the liquid, says a writer in Practical Farmer. Land plaster is excellent to fix the ammonia— that gas which is so easily lost; and coal that gas which is so easily lost; and coal ashes, as they come perfectly dry from the stove or furnace, are good for the same purpose. It is well known that the ground beneath a manure pile becomes saturated with fertility; so it is wise to remove this soil to a depth of six to ten inches, cart it away and replace with a quantity of new, dry soil, which in turn should also be drawn out and spread on a field or meadow. The matter of saving manure cannot be looked ter of saving manure cannot be looked into too closely. It is folly to depend on commercial fertilizers when much of our own manure goes to waste. American Gardening says: It is common among amateurs and some professionals who sow seeds of various kinds, either in or out of doors, whether the soil is moist or not, to water it immediately after sowing. From repeated trials I have found the above practice to WATERING THE SEEDBED. trials I have found the above practice to be a serious mistake. If the soil or compost in which the seeds are sown is moist at the time of sowing, do not water, as the soil becomes stiff and forms a crust on the surface, which prevents the seeds from pushing through. After sowing the seed in any soil, except an extremely dry one, wait a day or two before watering, until the soil dries up pretty well. Then water gently with a fine sprinkler sufficiently to moisten the soil moderately throughout, which will suffice until the soil shows signs of dryness again. Do not do as a great many dogive a little sprinkling every day. This only makes the case worse. only makes the case worse.

Names of the Mississippi Bly

An anonymous writer has asserted that from the mouth of the Ohio to the source of the Mississippi it was known as Pe-he-tou-st, an Algonquin significa-tion of abode or habitation of furies tion of abode or habitation of furies. The same writer asserts that L. M. Gould is authority for the statement that an analysis of the word shows that it does not mean "father of watera." "Mis-sisk means "grass; "Mis-sisk-keon," "weeds;" "Mis-sisk-ke," "medical herbs," and "Mis-ku-tuk" "the broad bottom lands" of the river. Thus the tribes inhabiting the bottom lands were called Mis-shu-tan or meadow people, from which the assertion comes that the literal meaning of the word is "the river of meadows of grass." But it is believed that the latter designation is a fanciful idea, in the light of other and very positive information which has come down to us.

made personal acquaintance with the "Nasouessiouck," speaks of them as living toward the west, near the great river called Messipi, a memorable remark, it being the first time (A. D. 1667) that the word was noted by any French writer. It would appear that, if Groseilliers and Raddison, to whom must be awarded the heave of discovaring the spear that the honor of discovering the upper waters of the river west of the great lakes, noted the name in any diary kept by them, it was probably lost when Groseil-liers, like Joliet at a later date, was upset in the St. Lawrence on his return from the second voyage.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

G. Washington, Marechal de France An interesting bit of history was t me lately by a descendant of G. Parke Custis.

It seems that when, in 1781, the United States sent to France a special embassa-dor some difficulty arose between him and the French government as to the command of the combined armies. Colo-nel Laurens, the embassador, stated very firmly that George Washington, our chief, must command, "for it is our cause, and the battle on our soil." The etiquette of the foreign govern however, exclaimed: "Uest imposs for here was Count Rochambeau, an old marechal de France.

The American wit of Colonel Laurens flashed upon the situation a happy thought. He said: "Make our Wash-ington a marechal de France and the difficulty is at an end." It was done. difficulty is at an end." It was done.

Mr. Custis continues that a friend of his

I have heard that in some home there is a treasure, held bey price—even the antiquity hunter's pr and he who aspires to buy the bones his ancestors—an ancient porcelain mug on which is painted an effigy of Wash-ington on horseback, and underneath is this inscription: "George Washington Eaq., General in chief of the United States Army and Marshal of France."— Wide Awaka

after a short time she decided to investigate. On approaching the place the hawk arose and perched upon a tree near by. In a few minutes it descended again. Mrs. Lasitter proceeded to the tackled a large blacksnake. Its talons were fast in the snake and the snake so entwined about the wings and body of the hawk that the latter could neither disengage itself from the snake nor rise with it. Mrs. Lasitter took advantage of the situation, and arming herself with a club killed both hawk and snake.
