THE DANGER AHEAD. The republicans practiced most shameless corruption in Multnomah county on ction day. They bought repeaters by the wholesale in order to schieve the "glorious victory" over which the Oregonian crows so lastily. The "great daily," great fool that it is, does not consider that the dragon's teeth of anarchy which were sown by the "grand old party" on June 4th in Portland's slums may spring up as crazy rioters armed with gatling guns and dynamite who might blow to fragments its stately towered structure. The droves of ig. norant and vicious men that were marched to the poles to vote the "republica ticket," have learned a lesson in lawlessness that they will not forget-The great crime against the purity of the ballot committed by the republican bosses of Portland on Monday of last week will, some time, "come home to roost." It is astonishing that the men of wealth in the city do not see that such prostitution of the ballot aided and abetted by the vagabonds hired by them as judges of election is imminent with future peril. The Sunday Welcome says of this matter:

A thousand men in this city to day—
not because they are demograts, republicans, or anything politically—not office seekers—men who never held an office and who went none—are sick and sore and sorrowful of soul. Not because this or that man was beaten; not because this or that party is supposed to have triumphed—but because every year at every election, it is becoming more and more apparent that freedom is a farce, liberty a lie, and government a failure.

When in this little city of Portland it When in this little city of Portland it is known that 2000 men will sell—not only themselves, but their wives and children if they have them, their very souls, their friends and neighbors, their country, their heaven, their God, to rick rascality and dirty diabolism, and get nothing but a day's wicked enjoyment in return—it is indeed time for sober, sane and decent men to stop and think.

The modus operandi of the republican corruptionists of Portland was careful and deliberate. First they took a census of the voters in each precinct of the city and determined their respective politics. On the eve of election they imported 700 men from the slums of the Sound cities and hired in addition a couple of hundred local toughs. tive politics. A latticed floor should be made somewhere on the north side of the barn, and either stretched from mow to mow or constructed on a cheap frame work. The floor can be made of bean poles or cheap scantling. The spaces between the slats should be only about an inch. If such a storage place is provided, the potatoes can be placed there even when they are wet, for the dry air circulating through them soon carries away the moisture. All through the rest of the summer and the early fall the potatoes can be kept in this cool place in the best of condition. DEVELOPING THE TROT. Famous Trotters Do Not Always Show

Their Speed Early.

Don't diseard the well bred colts quickly. If a youngster is bred right to trot, the chances are that he will some day do so if given a fair chance. We know of no better way to illustrate this point than to cite the instance of the 3-year-old colt Alitell. As is well known, J. W. Townsend, Plaintiff, his owner, not seeing how failure could result from such breeding, kept on working as poor a prospect, apparently, for a trotter as was ever hooked to a cart. But his perseverance won, and today no one has a more promising 3-year-old than this same Alltell. He is coming fast, and last week worked a mile nearly as fast as has been accomplished here this season. He covered the distance in should be spread out on a canvas or boards to dry before storing. They will dry in a very short time in harvesting colt, much less one that couldn't strike a respectable gait as a 2-year-old. Perseverance has made Alltell a trotter, and the same thing will make trotters of a great many other unpromising but well bred youngsters. Remember that in the horse business, as in everything else, "Perseverance wins."-American Trot-

FARMEN FIELD AND GARDEN

CABBAGES FOR WINTER MARKET.

Bow These Are Stored by Long Island's Progressive Truck Fermers.

The gardeners of Long Island have made a specialty of cabbages, and hundreds of tons are shipped to New York, Brooklyn and other places all through the winter. These cabbages are grown by progressive methods on soil well adapted to their culture. Then their methods of storing cabbages to keep them fresh all through the winter are worth considering, for probably they send as fresh looking cabbages to market in the middle of winter as they do in Novem-ber. It is described as follows in The American Cultivator:

"Late in the fall, before the garden is hard frozen, the location that is well drained should be selected, and in the land thus marked out the cabbages are stored. Sometimes the storage pit is made carefully and used only for this purpose every season. If naturally drained, artificial methods are employed to keep the water from collecting in the soil. This is a very important point, for nothing causes cabbages to rot quicker than damp, wet soil.

"Furrows are then thrown open with a deep plow, although on a small scale the spade is sometimes used for this work. Make the furrows deep and scoop out the loose earth in the middle. The cabbages are placed in the furrows with the head down, although this is contrary to methods of many far ners in other parts of the country, who place the roots downward. The stems are placed at an angle of 45 degrees, which almost brings the cabbages on their sides instead of directly perpendicular. The leaves are kept close to the heads, and then the earth is packed closely around them. The plow and spade can be used for packing the earth around and over the cabbages.

"Beware of too deep covering, for this is worse than too shallow. Two furrows with the plow are considered sufficient. These large gardeners never use straw or leaves on the cabbage for protection. They consider dirt sufficient, protection. They consider dirt sufficient, and surely their results are enough to prove the wisdom of their simple methods. Generally for the winter store cabbages that are not fully ripe are selected, as they keep better, and the dead ripe ones are marketed at once. In this way fresh cabbages are had the year round, and as the market demands them they are due up for use." they are dug up for use."
