big haul with his cel spear a few days Last July among the people who nrned at Essex was a wealthy Cincinnati family. A young lady member of this family went out boat riding one evening, and during the trip she lost a valuable bracelet from her arm.

The bracelet was in the form of a gold chain that fastened with a hook. The young lady was very much distressed over the loss of the ornament, and she offered a reward of $20 for its recovery. Fishermen searched the river bottom for it in vain.

A few days ago Beebe, who usually makes about two eeling trips to the Connecticut river during the winter, hitched up his horse and drove down. The ice was rather thin on the old celing ground, and Beebe was obliged to go about a mile up the river to Brockway's bend. Here the ice was soft, and Beebe began work. He worked all day like a beaver and succeeded in getting but one very small cel.

The next morning he decided to have fried cel for breakfast anyhow. He took the eel down from the nail on the side of the house, where he had hung it the night before. It was frozen as stiff as a marline spike, but he took it out into the woodshed, and in less than a minute he had its hide off.

He then ran his knife into the cel's throat and shoved it toward its tail. When about half way down, the point of the knife struck something that refused to be cut in two. He slashed into the cel's middle. To his astonishment, a long metal chain, as bright as if new, lay lengthwise of the stomach.

He showed the chain to his wife. Mrs. Beebe took the thing and exam-ined it. On the heel of the clasp the name of the young woman who lost the bracelet last summer was engraved. The circumstances of the lost bracelet were known to the people of Salem, and after breakfast Savilian hitched up his horse and headed for Essex, where he delivered the bracelet to the people with whom the Cincinnati family boarded and received the $20 reward .- Salem (Conn.) Time, according to the latest-ninth -published report--1891-2--- of the United States civil service commission has brought about a decided increase in the chances for women who wish to enter the public service. The civil service law practically went into effect in 1883. The report for 1884 stated that

MEDALS FOR BRAVERY.

King Oscar Sends Rewards to Two Gallant

F. K. Borden of 520 South From street, formerly chief officer of the bark S. G. Bowart, was presented last week through the Swedish and Norwegian consul with the King Oscar medal of the second class for his gallantry in saving the crew of the Norwegian bark Anunda of Christiania, Captain W. J. Larsen. Seaman Patrick Mulvaney, who volunteered to row Mr. Borden off to the waterlogged wreck, received a medal of the third class from King Oscar.

The Bowart fell in with the Anunda off the coast in February, 1893. The latter was in a sinking condition, and although a beavy sea was running and it was hazardons to launch a boat even Mr. Borden volunteered to try to rescue the crew. Seaman Mulvaney offered to go with him, and the two menaged to get alongside the derelict and took off Captain Larsen, his officers and crew. The shipwrecked men had given up all hopes when the Bowart hove in sight, and even then thought the sea too heavy for a rescue. The medals are of silver, with the head of King Oscar on one side, on the other the name with the motto "For humanity" in Norwegian .- Philadelphia Times.

Royal Flap-loodie.

The United States representative for the first time took his place in the highest rank this week at the royal social functions. Mr. Bayard stood last but one in the small group of embassadors that flanked the Prince of Wales at the queen's levee. The prince on formal occasions like this is no less strict than the queen herself in all matters of etiquette. He prescribes even the smallest letails of dress. Americans who wear ordinary evening dress at levees were notified recently to wear white studs and plain white gloves instead of with black braid. His royal highness is quick to detect the slightest irregularity. He noticed some fault in the uniform of a British army officer presented on Monday and embarrassed the man beyond measure by remarking in a low tone when greeting him, "Nothing like indicating his meaning by a that." slight gesture .- Cor.
