The charivari crowd came once more to Linn's mill, and found the happy couple at home, and the boys got to feeling funny; but they soon departed, some going straight home, some staying by the roadside, some carrying black eyes, and others sick and almost dead. At last reports they had all gotten over it.

We hear that the voting place for Milk Creek precinct has been changed to the Grange Hall at this place.

I wish to correct an error that your correspondent made either intentionally or carelessly two weeks ago, by saying that "Albert Burley had purchased a four-horse team expecting to haul flour and feed all winter, and now the hauling had given out and the team was on his hands to be cared for." The busy hum of the mill, which can be heard every day from eight to twelve hours, is answer sufficient; and it is not the fault of said mill if Mr. Burley, or any other teamster, has not the physical courage to follow an uneven ditch or rough summer fallow nine or ten miles in order to deliver the produce. Nevertheless, Mr. Howard's team can be seen on the road frequently.
