BARONIAL PARKS.

The Extent of Some Which Surround the Houses of English Noblemen. An article in The Cornhill Magazine on the cost of maintaining country houses centains some extremely inter esting particulars about the size of noblemen's parks. One hardly likes, the writer says, to guess the cost of repairs to the loose stone wall around Badminten park, high enough to prevent a deer leaping it and inclosing 986 deer. At Welbeck there are 10% miles of iron fencing around the three deer parks. Thoresby park is 12 miles around.

Though the deer have been removed or destroyed in no less than 50 parks since 1867 there are 404 deer parks and paddocks in England and Wales alone, and 8 of these are over 2,000 acres. Savernake is 4,000 acres. There are many ever 1,000 acres. The area has an additional intérest for the owner, because the bigger the park the more gates and ledges and reads it needs, and park reads, except town reads, are the dearest in this country.

In parks like Eridge, with 2,500 acres; Knowsley, 2,000 acres; Bienheim, 2,254 acres; Tatten, 2,000 acres, and others of less size, the mileage of roads, unless their numbers were kept down, would rival these of a moderate
