REMOVING DYNAMOS.--Since the addition to station B was completed on the west side of the river by the Portland General Electric Co. a few weeks ago, preparations were begun to gradually remove the machinery and apparatus from station A to station B. The first removal of dynamos from the old station to the new was made about three weeks ago. Four out of the 28 dynamos in station A have already been transferred to station B, and the entire plant, with the exception of three or four machines, which will be kept in the old station to be used in case of an emergency, will be removed across the river. The wires running from station A to west side across the bridge are being taken down. Station A was erected in 1889 by the Willamette Falls Electric Co., and had a capacity of 2800 horse-power, with 10 water wheels and 28 dynamos--11 excelsior arcs, four Edison, three brush machines, eight Westinghouse incandescent and two other. Up to 1896 station A supplied the whole of Portland and Oregon City with light and power.

CAMP FIRE.--The "camp fire" given by the G. A. R. and W. R. C. at Willamette hall on Tuesday evening was a very pleasant affair and largely attended, the seating capacity of the hall being taxed to accommodate the people. After the following program a delicious lunch was served to all present:
