Tries to Break Jall.

Ben Thompson, aged 18, who was bound over in the sum of $500 to appear before the grand jury on a charge of stealing E. N. Rasmussen's bicycle, was making good progress towards escaping from the county jail, when a quietus was put on his efforts Sunday by Sheriff Cooke and his deputies. The prisoners had using some refuse lumber and material from the suspension bridge, and Thompson had evidently found a drift nail in the stove left from the burning wood. With this he had improvised a tool to dig into the wall, and had made is way into the brick wall about four inches before he was discovered. When Jailor Nehren took the meals to the prisoners a suspended blanket on the line where the prisoners hang their clothes hid the beginning of an opening in the wall. Finally Jailor Nehren heard, or thought he heard a grating noise in one of the cells. An investigation Sunday resulted in the discovery that Thompson had dug into the wall to the depth of about four inches. Had he succeeded in digging through the wall of the cell he would have gained admission to an outer room, and would have easily made his escape by breaking through a glass window, Thompson now occupies a steel cell all to himself.

Major Charman Retires.

Major Thomas Charman, who is now in his 70th year, retired from active mercantile life Tuesday, having disposed of the Pioneer Store to the Portland Cash Store. The major now seeks a well sarned rest after 43 years of active business life in Oregon City. In 1853, Thomas Charman and John Warner, father of George Warner, purchased the general stock of merchandise belonging to the Hudson Bay Company, who had a trading post here long before Portland was dreamed about. In 1860 Fred Charman was taken into the firm, which became Charman, Warner & Co. Upon the death of Mr. Warner in 1864, the firm name was changed to Charman & Bro. In 1868 Fred Charman died, and Thomas Charman continued in business alone until 1880, when Fred R. Charman was admitted as a partner, and the firm name continued Charman & Son, until the business was disposed of. This was one of the oldest business houses in the state, and has been closely identified with the growth and progress of Oregon City.

At Shively's Monday.

"The Signal at Liberty" is based upon dramatic incidents in the recent war with Spain. It opens with a view of the governor-general's palace in Havana, followed by the arrival in the harbor of the battle-ship Maine. Stirring events follow, in all of which Lieutenant Dunbar, of the Maine, is the hero. By a series of fortnitious circumstances he reaches the post of danger just in the minute of need, and after he disposes of the villains in the customary summary way of the storied Yankee sailor, he talks like one whose conversational powers have been highly cultivated under the direction of the poot. He defeats Servilla's attempt to murder him, thwarts the purpose of Mantenello, the inhuman Spanish captain, to capture Gracia, sister of Oar denas, a Cuban patriot, arrives with his bluejackets too late to prevent the cowardly killing of Oardenas by Mantevello, but just in ti ne to witness the blowing up of the Maine, to take the oath of vengeance and to give the battlecry, "Remember the Maine!"
