The Portland Letter

Portland, Oregon, September 22, 1910

To the editor of the Portland Oregon:

I have read with interest your recent article on the subject of the Portland Public Market. I am writing to express my opinion on the matter, and to suggest some changes that I believe would improve the market.

First, I believe that the market should be located in a more central location. The current location is too remote from the downtown area, and it is difficult to get to by public transportation. A more central location would make it easier for people to shop at the market, and would also encourage more people to visit.

Second, I think that the market should be expanded to include more vendors. The current market is small, and there is not enough space for all of the vendors who would like to participate. An expansion would allow for more vendors, and would also give people more options to choose from.

Finally, I believe that the market should be designed to be more attractive to visitors. The current market is not very appealing, and it does not showcase the best of Portland. A redesign would make the market more attractive, and would also promote a positive image of Portland as a city.

I hope that you will consider these suggestions, and that you will work to improve the Portland Public Market. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
