It was made by direction of the Emperor of Germany, is signed by the minister of the interior, and countersigned by the German consul at Portland. Mr. Knapp said the proudest moment of his life was when he marched a French prisoner to the rear of his company.

Mrs. Lydia A. Mognett, a pioneer of 1851, died at Eagle creek, Sunday, March 20th, aged 87, and was buried Monday. The deceased was born at Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1812. She was married to J. B. Howlett, who died while crossing the plains in 1851. The deceased was a continuous resident of Clackamas county since her first arrival here. She left three children, Mrs. Mary Huelat Bradley, of Oregon City; W. J. Howlett, of Eagle creek, and J. N. Howlett, of Clackamas.

The Roseburg Review has the following referring to a former well known resident here: Captain J. P. Shaw of Coffee creek, one of the prominent miners of that district, is in the city today. He tells us that the present season has been an excellent one for placer mining, except that there has at times been too much water doing injury to ditches and flumes. There are now four giants at work on the creek, and a good clean-up is looked forward to. Snow is still deep in the surrounding mountains and Captain Shaw had some difficulty on that account in getting out.

School rows are proving to be expensive luxuries for the taxpayers of Clackamas county. A case from Macksburg cost about $50, and there was no conviction because the jury failed to agree. The next day after the school meeting at Highland, George Kirk came in and pleaded guilty to assaulting A. Nicholas. Justice Schuebel fined him $5, and this was expected to settle the matter.

Later, however, Nicholas filed a bond and had the case brought up again. The jury did not agree, and the costs amounting to about $75 must come out of the county. Now it is learned that Kirk is to have another hearing. The fault lies not with the justices, but the jury system is responsible for all these troubles. When a jury disagrees in a state case, the county is stuck for the costs.
